I thought we were having a good discussion until I hit the part where you say Bush was a known deserter.

Discussion over. I tried.

Interesting you might somehow refer in an off hand way to your kids as dogs.

Guess that would make you a bitch, would it not?

No carbon dioxide, no plants, little oxygen.

No feces, little agriculture. Well, some places anyway.   :-)

OTOH, no feces, very few politicians.

by George i think hes got it!

consider: CO2 is necessary for tree/plant life. human/animal waste products enrich the soil, which aids plant growth. which provides healthy food, which gives us humans more time to build and operate radio stations for the enjoyment of the multitudes. the more people the more the cume and TSL therefore the more cash flow and life is wonderful.

Read what he was replying to. That's his point. The reasoning doesn't hold Geez, lighten up. You have problems about dying. Get over it. It will get you. Do what you want while you are here. Have some fun. You may die. Oops, I mean, you WILL be dying! And the cool thing about it is you wont know it happened, you wont care and you wont feel it (being dead).

So since all OTA stations are buggy whips trying another foolish polish (HD Radio).... they wont be around too much longer anyhow.

OK, I know all this.  Commercials are life and they suck.  Now about about this:  IMAGING!  I am so sick and tired of hearing all this junk that spews out which "images" a station.  I think some is good, but not all the time! This is part of the clutter that I cannot stand.  I must be old fashioned on this one.

Try this blog for updated information.

<http://www.powerlineblog.com/archives/007760.php>

The documents aren't just proportional, one has a superscript, and they are kerned.  What are the odds the military used a high end typesetting machine to produce garden variety memos in the early 70's?

A link from that page leads to a guy who retyped one of the memos in Microsoft Word, and superimposed the printout with the CBS document and found everything matched exactly.

<http://littlegreenfootballs.com/weblog/?entry=12526_Bush_Guard_Documents-_Forged>

A logical next step would be to find other documents from the same officer from the same time period and see what they look like.
Naturally, these shouldn't come from the same source that provided the suspect ones.

But as it stands, it looks like they were forged.

Here's where this all started.

http://www.powerlineblog.com/archives/007760.php

And here's the son of the guy that wrote the memos saying he thinks something's not right about them.

http://abcnews.go.com/wire/Politics/ap20040909_1710.html

Son of Late Officer Questions Bush Memos

Son of Late Officer Questions Memos Attributed to His Father in File on President Bush's Service

The Associated Press

DALLAS Sept. 9, 2004 - The authenticity of newly unearthed memos stating that George W. Bush failed to meet standards of the Texas Air National Guard during the Vietnam War was questioned Thursday by the son of the late officer who reportedly wrote the memos.

"I am upset because I think it is a mixture of truth and fiction here," said Gary Killian, son of Lt. Col. Jerry Killian, who died in 1984.

Gary Killian, who served in the Guard with his father and retired as a captain in 1991, said one of the memos, signed by his father, appeared legitimate. But he doubted his father would have written another, unsigned memo which said there was pressure to "sugar coat" Bush's performance review.

"It just wouldn't happen," he said. "The only thing that can happen when you keep secret files like that are bad things. ... No officer in his right mind would write a memo like that."

News reports have said the memos, first obtained by CBS's "60 Minutes II," were found in Jerry Killian's personal records. Gary Killian said his father wasn't in the habit of bringing his work home with him, and that the documents didn't come from the family.

CBS stood by its reporting. "As a standard practice at CBS, each of the documents broadcast on "60 Minutes" was thoroughly investigated by independent experts and we are convinced of their authenticity," CBS News said in a statement.

The White House distributed the four memos from 1972 and 1973 after obtaining them from CBS News. The White House did not question their accuracy.

The THOUGHT they would get away with it.

In 1992, they might have done it.

But NOT today.

And now, two stories out now:  (1) CBS investigating HOW they were fooled.
(2) Barnes being outed as a deliberate liar.

"CBSNEWS LAUNCHES INTERNAL INVESTIGATION AFTER SUSPICIOUS BUSH DOCS AIRED

Exclusive

CBS NEWS executives have launched an internal investigation into whether its premiere news program 60 MINUTES aired fabricated documents relating to Bush's National Guard service, the DRUDGE REPORT has learned.

"The reputation and integrity of the entire news division is at stake, if we are in error, it will be corrected," a top CBS source explained late Thursday.

The source, who asked not to be named, described CBSNEWS anchor and 60 MINUTES correspondent Dan Rather as being privately "shell-shocked" by the increasingly likelihood that the documents in question were fraudulent.

Rather, who anchored the segment presenting new information on the president's military service, will personally correct the record on-air, if need be, the source explained from New York. "

And then there is that lying asshole, Ben Barnes:

"A woman alleging herself to be none other than Amy Barnes, daughter of fromer Lt Gov Ben Barnes called into a Texas radio program being hosted by well-known host Monica Crowley.

The woman, stating that her politics differed greatly from her Fathers, stated that he informed her months ago that he was going to "go public" with this story, known to be false. She claims that he has acknowledged the untruthfulness of this story to her over the years. She claims that there are two motivations for his doing this. One, to gain publicity for a book he is writing and, 2 the desperation of the Kerry campaign at this moment in time. Apparently Barnes offered to carry this tainted water if it appeared necessary in the general election to help secure a Kerry victory."

That and the superscript has led almost a dozen experts now to believe that the document was a forgery.

That thud was the dead body of the "Donkey" falling on the floor with Dan Rather's bullet in it's heart.

At the risk of sounding -really- stupid, I just have to ask this. I've read about using your window screen for an antenna; what about hooking directly up to the chain link fence itself? Would it work? It's grounded, so maybe not. I don't know, so I'm asking!

Will do. I've been planning on setting up a way to record some of these things for uploading. Maybe this is the shove that I need to actually do it.

Then again, maybe it's Friday and I've had a rough week. ;)

I have a sloping dipole from the tower to the fence corner, cut for about 15MHZ.
There's a Alpha Delta Sloper, the shorter one, off the tower to a roof vent. It needs to be replaced. It's in bad shape, almost 20 years old.
I have a short dipole in the attic as a back up.
A discone in the attic for one scanner, and two Scantennas for the others.
A ringo ranger on top of the tower for railband and the occasional 2M use.

Scanners:

Base:
RS PRO 2004, 2005, 2006
BC 9000XLT

Handhelds:

RS Pro 93
RS Pro 43
RS Pro 42
RS Pro 37

Yaesu VR500
Icom R2
Yupi 9000
Icom R10 (dead) but should soon be back up and running.

Bush ignored orders and was not where he was supposed to be when he was under orders to be there.  Technically, he was a deserter.

And the discussion was going nowhere.  You don't have proof that Kerry wrote anything to direct his being awarded a medal.  Since you don't seem to understand either what proof is or where the burden of proof lies, it's doubtful that this discussion is going to be fruitful for either of us.

250 ft random wire.  Perverted-V formation.  (Inverted-V with several irregular twists and turns due to adjacent trees and available supports).

The antenna seems to work fine from MW to 10m.  I'll be adding another 140 ft to it later this month - in time for some MW dx-ing this winter.

It's funny - that's exactly what many in Australia said 2 years ago, but look at us now, no code requirement at all!  Don't be too quick to expect FCC to maintain its ground when everyone else is changing....

Well, I am a new SW-55 owner as well -- an incredible radio.   I'll check this out, but I think this is going to fall into the realm of things we put up with for the amount of stuff that's packed into these receivers.

I have not had a SONY portable yet, including SW-100 and 2010s, that had its oscillator smack on frequency across the range.

Hm, well, it'd be nice if the FCC were known for quick and efficient decisions. I am not sure which regulatory body makes the rules for Australia's amateur radio ops, but congrats on having such an apparently efficient one yourselves. The FCC here in America seems to be more concerned with pushing through technologies that would ultimately ruin the use of the HF spectrum altogether (BPL) than concern themselves with anything having to do with amateur radio. I have talked with many American hams about this subject, and even if we do not agree on what should be done about the code test, we all agree that the FCC will most likely be exceedingly slow to act on making a decision about the Code test either way. They have no real incentive to do so. Then again, why should American hams expect the FCC to make a quick decision if we can't stop fighting about it amongst ourselves?

I am thinking it will be at least 2-3 years before we hear from them about the Code test. If it's earlier, fine by me. I have already passed the damned thing anyway, and couldn't care less if hams that come after me need to pass it or not.

Cheers to you Down Under, and 73,

Jackie

I don't care if they're CBS or CNN or FOX or NPR.  If they lied they lied.
CBS Stated that the documents had been reviewed by independent document authorities.  Go to cbsnews.com.

Now I'm used to lies and near lies from FOX but I've got to hold CBS to a higher standard because it is supposed to be actual News.  60 Minutes is even advertised as a New program.  So if they didn't get those documents reviewed by bona fide experts, then they LIED.

How about the Media, didn't they lie?

A Review of The Film Orwell Rolls In His Grave
By Ron Kaufman

"All over Oceania this morning there were irrepressible spontaneous demonstrations when workers marched out of factories and offices and paraded through the streets with banners voicing their gratitude to Big Brother for the new, happy life which his wise leadership has bestowed upon us.

"For the moment [Winston] had shut his ears to the remoter noises and was listening to the stuff that streamed out of the telescreen. It appeared that there had even been demonstrations to thank Big Brother for raising the chocolate ration to twenty grams a week. And only yesterday, he reflected, it had been announced that the ration was to be reduced to twenty grams a week. Was it possible that they could swallow that, after only twenty-four hours? Yes, they swallowed it . . . with the stupidity of an animal."
-- from Nineteen Eighty-Four by George Orwell

Orwell Rolls In His Grave is a well done film that presents the Orwellian notions of "doublespeak," "big brother" and "the endless war" in a contemporary context. Ironically, its message of corporate media control and the loss of free speech in America will never get any exposure. The film is critical of the very companies it needs for effective distribution. Politics and conspiracy theories aside, the film makes a strong case against the consolidation of media companies. In the end, the film polarizes the United States into "us" versus "them" -- this being "the general public" versus "the corporate elite." The public may eventually learn of this viewpoint, but one thing is certain. It will never be reported in the media.

As Mark Crispin Miller explains in the film, individuals may get headlines and specific companies may be investigated in newspapers and TV, but the system will never be scrutinized. Big media will never admit that it has influence over our world and corporations may allow airtime for parts of the truth, but the whole truth will never get broadcast.

"Sex, Lies and Newsreels"

You want to know where the Fox is? Just follow the money...  ;)

"rule number one of investigative reporting is "follow the money" -- but the sheiks' piggy banks were effectively off-limits to the US agents during the Bush years."

SEPTEMBER 11: WHAT YOU "OUGHT NOT TO KNOW"
DOCUMENT 199-I AND THE FBI'S WORDS TO CHILL THE SOUL

Thursday, September 9, 2004
by Greg Palast

On November 9, 2001, when you could still choke on the dust in the air near Ground Zero, BBC Television received a call in London from a top-level US intelligence agent. He was not happy. Shortly after George W. Bush took office, he told us reluctantly, the CIA, the Defense Intelligence Agency (DIA) and the FBI, "were told to back off the Saudis."

We knew that. In the newsroom, we had a document already in hand, marked, "SECRET" across the top and "199-I" - meaning this was a national security matter.

The secret memo released agents to hunt down two member of the bin Laden family operating a "suspected terrorist organization" in the USA. It was dated September 13, 2001 -- two days too late for too many. What the memo indicates, corroborated by other sources, was that the agents had long wanted to question these characters ... but could not until after the attack. By that time, these bin Laden birds had flown their American nest.

Back to the high-level agent. I pressed him to tell me exactly which investigations were spiked. None of this interview dance was easy, requiring switching to untraceable phones. Ultimately, the insider said, "Khan Labs." At the time, our intelligence agencies were on the trail of Pakistan's Dr. Strangelove, A.Q. Khan, who built Pakistan's bomb and was selling its secrets to the Libyans. But once Bush and Condoleeza Rice's team took over, the source told us, agents were forced to let a hot trail go cold. Specifically, there were limits on tracing the Saudi money behind this "Islamic bomb."

Then we made another call, this time to an arms dealer in the Mideast. He confirmed that his partner attended a meeting in 1995 at the 5-star Hotel Royale Monceau in Paris where, allegedly, Saudi billionaires agreed to fund Al Qaeda fanatics. We understood it to be protection money, not really a sign of support for their attacks. Nevertheless, rule number one of investigative reporting is "follow the money" -- but the sheiks' piggy banks were effectively off-limits to the US agents during the Bush years. One of the men in the posh hotel's meeting of vipers happens to have been a Bush family business associate.

Before you jump to the wrong conclusion, let me tell you that we found no evidence -- none, zero, no kidding -- that George Bush knew about Al Qaeda's plan to attack on September 11. Indeed, the grim joke at BBC is that anyone accusing George Bush of knowing anything at all must have solid evidence. This is not a story of what George Bush knew but rather of his very-unfunny ignorance. And it was not stupidity, but policy: no asking Saudis uncomfortable questions about their paying off roving packs of killers, especially when those Saudis are so generous to Bush family businesses.

Yes, Bill Clinton was also a bit too tender towards the oil men of Arabia. But this you should know. In his last year in office, Clinton sent two delegations to the Gulf to suggest that the Royal family crack down on "charitable donations" from their kingdom to the guys who blew up our embassies.

But when a failed Texas oil man took over the White House in January 2001, demands on the Saudis to cut off terror funding simply stopped.

And what about the bin Laden "suspected terrorist organization"? Called the World Assembly of Muslim Youth, the group sponsors soccer teams and summer camps in Florida. BBC obtained a video of one camp activity, a speech exhorting kids on the heroism of suicide bombings and hostage takings. While WAMY draws membership with wholesome activities, it has also acted as a cover or front, say the Dutch, Indian and Bosnian governments, for the recruitment of jihadi killers.

Certainly, it was worth asking the bin Laden boys a few questions. But the FBI agents couldn't, until it was too late.

In November 2001, when BBC ran the report on the spike of investigations of Saudi funding of terror in November 2001, the Bush defenders whom we'd invited to respond on air dismissed the concerns of lower level FBI agents who'd passed over the WAMY documents. No action was taken on the group headed by the bin Ladens.

Then, in May this year, fifty FBI agents surrounded, invaded and sealed off WAMY's Virginia office. It was like a bad scene out of the 'Untouchables.' The raid took place three years after our report and long after the bin Ladens had waved bye-bye, it is not surprising that the feds seized mostly empty files and a lot of soccer balls.

Why now this belated move on the bin Laden's former operation? Why not right after the September 11 attack? This year's FBI raid occurred just days after an Islamist terror assault in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia.
Apparently, messin' with the oil sheiks gets this Administration's attention.

The 199-I memo was passed to BBC television by the sleuths at the National Security News Service in Washington. We authenticated it, added in our own sleuthing, then gave the FBI its say, expecting the usual,
"It's baloney, a fake." But we didn't get the usual response. Rather, FBI headquarters said, "There are lots of things the intelligence community knows and other people ought not to know."

Ought not to know?

What else ought we not to know, Mr. President? And when are we supposed to forget it?

I don't think "60 Minutes" qualifies as a 527, somehow.

The plot is thickening.  IBM says yes they DID have proportional fonts as early as 1944, Rather produced a guard memo released by the WH which showed the same font and typesetting, and most notably, neither the WH nor the GOP or rival networks are saying the documents are faked.

This may be the biggest story of the campaign, and right now I have no idea how it's going to play out.

This confirms that all our right wing folks who made all kinds of individualistic and anti-government grunts and honks during the 90s really just want a government that is a cross between Jehovah and daddy.

By the way, I think it's worth pointing out that while I think the physical documents are phony, it's VERY interesting that the White House saw them and released them and didn't claim that they weren't true - in fact, they claimed that they supported Bush's story.  That would seem to indicate that the substance of the documents - the content - was at least plausible.  They read the documents and didn't say "Hey... wait a minute, these documents are bogus!"
Instead, they looked at them and said, "Yeah, sounds about right."

Well, I monitored 6905 from 0350 to 0431 UTC and didn't hear it. I did hear what I believe to be some sort of voice transmission, but it was much too faint to make out any words or even guess at the language. Probably has nothing to do with last night's transmission. Nuts.

No doubt about it. Not only the war was unnecessary but it was also strategically stupid. Now the troops are thinly deployed, facing an

So long as they have the media as lapdog they won't have a problem.
The watchdog though is used against the people...;)

No, not at all.

True.  To stand up in court, there would have to be more rigorous examination.  And I assume that will be done and the results will be published.  In the meantime, I use my own eyes, my knowledge of printing and my experience with typewriters and typography, and I am pretty sure that the documents are fakes.

Huh?  Jeeze...   What does a forgery "look like"?  By definition the whole purpose of forging a document is to make it look like the real thing.  And anyway, for all the reasons that have been explained ad nauseam, these docs DO look like forgeries.  They look like pretty amateur ones, at that.

Proportional fonts, superscript "th", the apostrophes and kerned characters are plenty.  Add to that the testimony from the family that the man who supposedly kept these files didn't actually keep files like this... And with more rigorous examination, I suspect the truth will be proved.

Why are they the results of numerous copying processes?  Where are the originals?  They look like they've been faxed to me.  Why is that?

The content sems to be fine - the White House looked at the docs and said "Yeah, that sounds about right."  They didn't deny the docs and they even said they supported Bush's story.

This site correctly points out that the font in the docs is not Times New Roman (at least - it's not the same as the version of TNR I have on my win2000 machine...)  And it asserts that because the IBM Executive had proportionally spaced characters, the documents could have been produced on an IBM Executive.

Problem is, the Executives didn't use a ball - they used a standard hammer and moving platen arrangement, and as such didn't do alternative fonts.  You got one font with them.  And I don't know for sure, but I'll bet it was either Courier or Elite.  But the documents are not in either Courier or Elite, so they were not produced on an IBM Executive, so all the people who like to point to that proportionally-spaced typewriter as a possibility can give that up.

Exactly. That is the Big Question. That, and of course, CBS News (and Dan Rather in particular) credibility is on the line. It may not make much difference to the election, but it is serious stuff to CBS.

Mine defines "homemade", but worked out well for me:

I found a spool of 14 gauge stranded with insulation that precisely matches the color of the ceilings in our home.  Using white electrical staples, I mounted it at the wall-to ceiling point, and ran it straight through the family room, down a long hallway, and into my shack, across the ceiling there, and terminating about 3' above my receiver, where I joined it to coax and the coax to an antenna connector for input.  It is 55' long, and mounted 7.5 feet above grade.  I used this alone for about a month, and was very pleased with the results.

In an effort to "notch it up a bit" (don't all antenna experimenters?) I ran an additional 55' of the wire around the ceiling/wall juncture of my shack.  It goes around exactly 1 and 1/4 times, (also 7.5 feet up) and again drops to 3' above the receiver, where it joins the coax at the same point as the original wire.  I now had a 110' longwire antenna, center-tapped.

I read here a few months back where a poster remarked that doubling a 50' random wire to 100' would increase signal strength by only 3dB. That's basically what I found, too.  There is a slight edge to signal strength since I went to 110', but only slight.  The 55' alone gave me good results.  Receiver is an Icom R-75, by the way.

I like the relative "invisibility" of teh way I did it.  110' of antenna, and no one even notices it unless it's pointed out to them. Even my wife didn't notice it for more than 6 weeks after I installed it, and had no problem with it when she did notice it ("Gee,you can barely see it.")

Comments/suggestions welcome - I'm always trying to learn more.

Tony

That's what the Bush people want you to believe. Do your homework and you'll find out that the font did exist back then, including the 'th' symbol.

That's what CBS wants you to believe.  Do your homework and you'll find there are other issues with authenticity.  BTW, the "Bush people" who actually work for Bush have said next to nothing about this, unless one considers the Washington Post to be Bush people.

It's an interesting point.  "Nuanced" is the current vernacular. Essentially, the Bush White House is inclined to accept it, because they think the content to be essentially correct.  Which means that, in a round about way, Bush is admitting he disobeyed direct orders which hardly puts him in for a honorable discharge.

My guess is that the White House doesn't think the public is bright enough to see that kind of admission for what it is.

I agree with you on that.  There's something really odd going on here.
Consider too that the White House literally made almost no comment at all on the documents.  One would have thought that there would have been some comment on the content at least.

I had both the R-7A and the HQ-180 at the same time. The R&A is superb, but its audio made it hard to ID stations, but it could sure dig out the DX; it is still regarded as the best radio of any type for the "tropical bands" 2-4 MHz.

The HQ-180 had superb audio, and DX "dig" ability. But not great on frequency readout.

BTW the Skanti 5000/5001 is the equal of the R7 in performance. It's what I use now for AM DXing.

Try www.dogparksoftware.com  .  They have a product, MacLoggerDX, whic runs on the macintosh and can control the R-5000.

Perhaps they can help you out with that information.

The R-75 is SO sensitive that the MW area has something to attenuate MW signals;
So you don't get overloaded from local statins
However;
R-75 does Work pretty good with an external antenna.

IF you're just after MW, Suggest getting something else & an external / Justice / Loop antenna

Why is the same, tired old overwrought "interpretation " of a murderous terrorist "well-worth reading"?  Does it really take any skill or intelligence to start with a preconception---find some way, any way, to blame the West-- and twist one's so-called "facts" to meet that preconception?  The concept of Bin Laden, presumably bereft of his own free will, as "creation" is as ludicrous as the inability of those who float such an idea to make any moral judgment---except, of course, in one instance--when that judgment can be anti-American.

Thanks. I have found some soft commands thru searches and links. We tested the software he wrote for the Ten Tec 320 and it's been adapted already for the 5000. I tested a beta today and it's great. I'll let you guys when it's ready. So far so good. We're working fast.

Yes, you have it right. They are only a threat to us as long as we go to them, which we have done. The US picked a fight, now we're stuck with it.

I tried canceling that message. The 'snipped' URL was bad. I had garbage in the copy memory when I pasted the address.

My message disappeared here, so I thought it was gone everywhere. Looks like Gore could have done a better job when he invented the Internet.

Because the 2 antennas are of opposite polarity- they will be essentially invisible to each other- typical isolation runs in the 20-30dB range- making interaction unnoticeable.

someone (not me) has started a yahoo group for owners of these two receivers. as I own one of each I would like to see lots of members !

so go to www.groups.yahoo.com and search for drake sw-4a and join us !

want to know what rare is !

the drake SW-4 had only 600 produced and they were all "hand assembled" at about a rate of 10 per day now thats RARE !!!!!!!!

I get a BIG laugh when someone calls a sony or panasonic radio with 40,000 produced a "rare" radio

HA HA HA !!!!

My Super 909 has fantastic sensitivity right off the whip.  Equal to a 2010 on SW and a whole lot better features.

The modifications must be effective. The 909, on it's whip antenna, is not exactly deaf but rather hard of hearing. The filters are pretty poor. It performs well on an external antenna though but, of course, this doesn't do anything for the filters.

My favorite part was this:

"Bin Laden was at the center of one of the most important events of the 20th century: The fall of the Soviet Union. Political pundits like to credit Reagan and the senior Bush for the collapse of that regime, but out in front of them, in the mountains of Afghanistan, was Osama bin Laden and al Qaeda, the sharp end of our sword, who did their job very well. Today, the United States faces this group and its leader, armed with their well-learned and America-taught lessons: How to kill massively and how to annihilate a superpower."

I'm going to print that out a few dozen times on my printer. Then I'm going to run those papers through the shredder, after which I'm going to sprinkle them on my pumpkin patch. You guys think you've seen big pumpkins before?
Step back...mine are gonna be freaking HUGE!

Hi,

I am new to Shortwave listening, though, have obessesion for radios since childhood.

Is there any one in this group living in Pakistan. I am from Karachi and planning to buy a shortwave receiver soon. Before actually getting it I want to make sure how well they work in this part of the world. Plus do they catch hams and other channels here in Pakistan.

Thanking you in anticipation and wish you all good listening.

Regards,

You obviously don't use it for SSB.

I'm not 100% certain about this, but as I recall the MARS callsigns starting withh NN are Navy/Marine stations, those starting with AA are Army, and those srarting with AF are AirForce.

Or the R7, it's the same radio.  (Though R7A's always seem to command a higher price). Hanging on to mine also.

I have the 8, 6, 4, 3 and 2.3 filters in mine.

I'm not sure if there is anyone on this list from Pakistan, however, you might want to contact Alokesh Gupta (alokeshgupta AT vsnl.net) of the dx_india group.

I'm sure he'll be able to answer all of your questions regarding reception in your area.

Enjoy.

As Dale says, due to the cross-polarization (and the fact that the TV antenna is below the Antron) I doubt they're seriously affecting each other's operation.

If you had a horizontally-polarized antenna 6" above the TV antenna (for example, a 10-meter Yagi) it would be a very different story.

The only Star Trek solution I see is to get aboard a spaceship and get the hell out of here--fast. Other than that there may be a revolution of some sort to bring back evolution back into place. The dinosaurs don't want to evolve but we have to push them a little bit...

Do you see Star Trek in this picture? It's one of those dots...

Hi

Accidently came across a unidentified Russian station on 6.235 as of 0515-0530. Pop music and commentar by a Russian OM.

I have little idea what it is.

Your gullible Mike. Trying to blame all the problems in the Middle East on America is a cheap shot and its a lot more complex than a simplified biased story trying to justify Bin L's position. If all those countries were interested in peace they would bend a little and compromise. The Palestinian /Israel conflict is a prime example of no compromise. I just love how you guys like to oversimplefy the problems in the Middle East.

Their work is thankless, and a little overblown press once and awhile is about as bad as that gets. What's really aggravating, is to hear the vermin crawl out of their holes and whistle and otherwise deliberately disrupt emergency communications on the HWN and Maritime Mobile Net. Some Amateur operators in spanish and asian languages (one group allegedly operates within Florida) deliberately acts up on 14323 whenever the net is active on 14325.

Not for long.  This time of year (at least up here) 15 and 17 MHz get very sensitive to the space weather and often go away not long after sunset.
Friday, at 05:00 or thereabouts, there wasn't anything from the south Pacific but RNZI at 11820 and RA's Grandstand on 9660.  The 15 MHz signals were fine on Wednesday.  What a difference a couple days can make.

What time?  At 00:00, 17795 has been about S3, (even with a new antenna wire and treating my R-1000's antenna attenuator switch with Stabilant/Tweek contact enhancer) and 17715 was (under S1) in the mud.

What's his call sign.  I know he's a ham, because I've watched TBN here while channel surfing and I got interested in watching  a puff piece on a (then) new geosync satellite (that they were going to lease a big chunk of).  He went into the history of TBN, which started from in interest in radio.

Let's hope they some day notice they have a radio station, and start putting radio programs on it.  Every time I tune by, they are simulcasting some boring program from their TV network.  What a waste of a great signal.

As far as the applications I know of, time sensitive applications in Israel, use GPS receivers.

I've seen various LW time signal coverage maps online and none of them would reach Israel. Once I saw that companies were selling 'international'versions of so-called "atomic clocks" I started looking at coverage area myself....

It's been done. Their was a company, don't remember who, that put this out on the ham market some years ago, The modern equivalent that is currently manufactured is the Yo-Yo antenna.

I'm looking to buy one online, since there don't seem to be any purveyors in my area. I'd like to hear some recommendations for brands. I've found several styles, but I'm hoping to find one that's easiest to read quickly.
(Some look like they'll take a couple of seconds of deciphering.) I'm thinking of going digital for that reason, but I have to admit I kind of like the way the analog clocks look in the shack photos that I've been seeing lately. Does anyone out there prefer a particular brand or face-style over any other? Or is this just a case of "I'll get used to it over time"?
That's what I suspect, but what with all of the years of experience in here, I'd be a fool not to avail myself of some of it. ;)

I keep reading this about fluorescent lights and yes, some are noisy but most are no problem. I have a four foot, two tube fluorescent in my shack. No noise from it at all. I have four, four foot, two tube fixtures in the garage. No problem with them either.

MFJ is the most common brand, and the quality of their clocks ranges from so-so to excellent, depending on what you want to pay. I bought mine on EBay - cheap, and no problems at all after 2 years.

Radio Japan very weak this morning on 9535 for the 17 to 18 hrs broadcast. I see we have a solar flare in progress. Normally they put in a very strong signal and a some what weaker one on 11970.

go digital. i got 2 here from Universal Radio.
1- local, 24 hour time.
2- UTC, 24 hour time.

both atomic set, or what ever its called. really cool. can read either from across the room. both were under $30 each. real easy to read. check out Universal Radio. or, google lacrosse. about the same price anywhere. i bought from Universal as support for my favorite radio dealer. they both have day, date, and inside temp. believe rat shack has them also...

Same time frame 00:00 to 2:00 UTC. I usually listen on 21740 and when Australia switches off that frequency I go to 17715 or 17795.

Your premise is not even logical. We are there to setup a democratic government. Everyone there knows we will leave once the country stabilizes so why would the insurgents just stir up trouble to keep us there? The answer is arabs from other nations in the area that do not want Iraq to have a democratic government are fighting us in Iraq not the local people. They are called terrorists if you have not figured it out yet.

You mean vertical versus horizontal polarization?

Once the old ballast type have started up into a good bulb you will probably not hear much noise from a fluorescent but the newer high efficiency switching type can make plenty of noise.

I bought a La Crosse technology model WS-8007U from Radio shack for about $24. I have the clock set to UTC time so it shows me the UTC date and day. This unit also has moon phase and room temperature. I have found all these displays handy at times. This clock synchronizes to WWVB and I can only recall one time for a few days that it did not receive a good signal from WWVB in southern California. It is a shelf model that can also hang on the wall if you prefer and it has a BIG DISPLAY easily seen from across the room.

There's a longer version?!  It already set a record for a press release.
I gather somebody wants to take the frequencies away.  Jeez, talk about pointless self-importance.  You could get even better emergency communications by putting up more cell phone towers and not have to suffer through the press release.

Look for a ``Car-jackers Handle Emergency Transportation'' release from civil rights organizatons.

Does anyone have any information about the node status of the IRLP station on Cayman? www.irlp.net
I have checked the listings but the station is not listed anymore.
I will be on island next month and will bring VHF gear and hope to use the irlp when I get there. 73.

Here is a link to the Cayman amateur radio club in Cayman Islands.

For BC DX use, definitely the 2010. SSB clarification may, however, not be sufficient to you because of its 100 Hz steps and inavailability of fine tuning; the 7600GR with its analog fine tuning is at an advantage there. Do note that these receivers are very different in size, the 2010 is not extremely compact by today's standards while it's rather easy to lug around the 7600GR almost anywhere. Something with performance equal to or better than the former (plus fine tuning) in the format of the latter would be nice. (It would be possible, as the ICF-SW07 has shown.)

FROM JANE'S INTELLIGENCE SERVICE:
An unprotected PC now survives only 20 minutes before being infected, a dramatic decrease from the 40-minute lifespan recorded for 2003, according to researchers at the US SANS (Systems and Networking Security) Institute, a highly regarded security educational body. Researchers use specially designed poorly protected computer networks, called ‘honey pots’ or ‘honey nets’ to watch how attackers break into computer systems, in order to learn how to protect them.

To answer your question, YES, it is very possible that the tv antenna is affecting your Antron antenna. The signal could be reflecting off the tv antenna at different points which will change the radiation pattern. It is also possible that the tv antenna is affected, but if so, probably as a positive as certain tv signals can reflect off the other antenna onto the tv antenna. But if you have a ghost problem with tv reception, it could be because of the two antennas being close together.

Several years ago I lived in Fair Oaks, California, and had a large Channel Master antenna mounted on a 40-ft mast with rotor. The neighbor ACROSS THE STREET noticed their reception would go in and out, and one day noticed my antenna turning as their signal went in and out.

Since I have never tried an un-modified one I really do not have a direct comparison on the sensitivity increase.  I do, however, know that the sensitivity is very good on this one.  As far as overloading it is not a big problem although it is somewhat noticeable.  The modified filters (again no direct comparison) seem to work well on shutting out adjacent stations.

Poor SW sensitivity in general or just poor off of the whip ???  I thought that it was a good performer when used with an external.

That's pretty funny. I would like to think that I'm smarter than you think I am, whatever that means.

Who do you think we are fighting in Iraq right now? They are not the citizens of Iraq that are trying to kick start their own government.

Still a bit early, and I'm not sure which way they might have their antenna running, which will certainly affect reception. They have been heard here in the

I'll give it a try again in a few more hours.  Still.... With only 12 kilowatts ???  Need fairly good conditions and at the very least.... As you have pointed out.  They gotta have the thing pointed in my direction.

Does anyone have a good source for an online (international) time zone converter that permits the user to enter a given time in one zone and the converter calulates the time in another zone?

I am already familiar with these sites:

www.timetemperature.com
www.worldtimeserver.com

Thanks

Shortwave Log installed easily on my WIN XP computer.  It requires installation of a few extra files and runs great.

Following recent Republican efforts to discredit Kerry's military service medals, the ultra conservative group Judicial Watch, best known for nuisance lawsuits against Democrats, asked the Navy to open an investigation into the matter.

In response to that request, Navy Inspector General Vice Admiral Ronald A. Route conducted a review of Kerry's Vietnam-era military service awards and concluded Friday that procedures were properly followed in the approval of Sen. John Kerry's Silver Star, Bronze Star and three Purple Heart medals, according to an internal memo written to Navy Secretary Gordon England.

"Our examination found that existing documentation regarding the Silver Star, Bronze Star, and Purple Heart medals indicates the awards approval process was properly followed," Route wrote in the memo. "In particular, the senior officers who awarded the medals were properly delegated authority to do so. In addition, we found that they correctly followed the procedures in place at the time for approving these awards."

"Conducting any additional review regarding events that took place over 30 years ago would not be productive," Route continued. "The passage of time would make reconstruction of the facts and circumstances unreliable, and would not allow the information gathered to be considered in the context of the time in which the events took place."

For more information on this story, see;

http://abcnews.go.com/wire/Politics/ap20040917_1894.html

Those of us who earlier defended Kerry's medals will now certainly watch to see if those Republicans who were so quick to openly belittle Kerry's medals in recent weeks will be as quick to openly admit their mistake, or will they now choose to attack the Navy Inspector General's review instead.

Sure, procedures WERE followed, but still, they were awarded based upon Kerry's bogus reports!

You folks are sure getting desperate!

Hi,

I mostly do MW listenign/dx'ing.  I would be interested in feedback on how well the R75 performs on MW.  I know there are Kiwa mods to increase the MW sensitivity.  Are these really necessary?  Is the difference that dramatic?

Well anyway, I would be interested in any user input on the R75.

Thank you

Hiya... I have an R-75 and I like it quite a bit, but not for MW. It is sensitive enough and works just fine on most MW, but if you want to DX a weak MW signal I find that the R-75 is too noisy. Way too much snap crackle and pop. I use a GE SR-III for MW DX'ing. Because it is analog it is quite as can be. The draw back is that the tuner dial is not accurate at all. I've read/heard that the CC Radio Plus is better then the GE-SR series because it has an accurate tuner. It may not be as sensitive as the GE-SR III or as quite, but it is probably one of the best MW radios available. I also know that there are a lot of people that use old analog tuning automobile radios as their MW DX'ing radio but I wouldn't know about which ones to use or how to get them...

So... For MW, you have way better choices then the R-75. The R-75 shines for sw utility and sw DX'ing using ssb and ECSS tuning, but it isn't regarded as a MW radio.

Hope that helps...

Michael

TAR can really mess up your hybrid/analog radio gear.
Stiffened/stuck parts and/or contact problems are common, and it is a bitch to clean up the radios back to working order.
YES , a smoke free environment is a must for top performance.

At 23:50 I'm getting a het.  Who knows what it is from though.  Now way for me to know if it is WRM.  I thought I might have heard something approximating music for a few seconds but it was bordering between static and imagination.

Thanks, I'll give it a try.  I was a little hesitant due to all the talk about the ".net" and other aspects that seemed like possible trouble.  Hard enough to keep these machines stable without adding to the problem with software that might be risky.

Okay, I installed it and no problems.  Now I have to learn how to use it (Smile).

The Radio Netherlands review of this model pretty much says it all (http://www.rnw.nl/realradio/html/icf-sw7600gr.html).

It's the best radio in it's class, in my opinion. Very sensitive, with a good sync detector that's far more useful than I expected it to be.
It has attenuation and a fine tuning wheel that works very nicely when listening in SSB.

Go for it! It's a great value.

I assume you're looking for a desktop radio.

I think you can do better than an R75 for MW.

Get a Drake R8B if you can afford it. It's got an excellent synch detector. If price is an issue, the Palstar R30 is supposed to be a superb (albeit no bells or whistles) MW radio for it's price, which I believe is cheaper than an R75.

Excluding mega-buck military or maritime radios, the legendary Drake R7A is, in my opinion, the BEST solid-state MW DX radio ever made. If you can find a used one in good condition, grab it. I have one, and will NEVER part with it.

TCXO = Temperature Compensated Crystal Oscillator

It is common shorthand to refer to "crystal" as "xtal" or simply "X" when used in an acronym.
The device will (usually) operate the xtal element at an elevated temperature, say 100 degrees F or so, plus or minus a few tenths of a degree. This stabilizes the crystal frequency to a feww ppm or less.

(Received this from the station)

Following our highly successful first transmission via the 9290kHz Latvia outlet, we will be carrying out another transmission during October from Riga and are also currently in talks with another provider in the USA to relay our service.

We are also negotiating additional funding so that we can launch E R I across Europe from early 2005 on Sky Digital.

We have now moved our website to www.europaradiointernational.co.uk which enables gives us a lot more flexibility including webstreaming which should come on-line soon.

Finally we have made the decision NOT to seek an Medium Wave outlet in Europe at this time due to the ludicrous fees being charged by the vast majority of airtime providers for what is frankly becoming an outmoded means of transmission and will be concentrating our efforts on getting the Sky Digital service up and running.

Or +45 and -45. The point is they must be orthogonal.

How about the new Xenon (flourescent-type) fixtures - we're getting ready to put these under cabinets in a new kitchen. Anybody have experience with interference from them?

I use a Radio Shack 63-959 travel clock.About $14.95. It can be set for 12 or 24 hour time, shows temp, date and day of the week and can be set for alarm. Hard shell case flips down to make a base. Runs on one AAA battery. Nothing fancy, but it works. Just set it for UTC.

I've read and heard both sides of the argument about antenna tuners being great, or not helping at all and are a waste of money. I've been told they are only for shortwave transmitting, and I've been told they work well to improve shortwave reception on faint signals. I've had it suggested to me that I get a pre-selector instead.

I can't find anyone who actually experimented with either a tuner or pre-selector... at least none of what I've read and heard was stated as "experience"... rather it seemed like theory or conjecture.

Does anyone here actually use a tuner or pre-selector for shortwave listening, and if so, with what results? I'm looking at the MFJ-959C antenna tuner at http://www.universal-radio.com/catalog/preamps/2574.html
Note that it says "for receive only".

Sanjaya,

I doubt that anyone else's opinion about a tuner selling new for $15 is worth much to you. Go ahead and try the thing for Pete's sake! Expect to get $15 worth of product.  Or, spend 5 times that much for MFJ equipment that adds a noise-feed which a tuner can then be adjusted to null the noise, and the tuner is then configured to make your antenna resonant for the given frequency. That will definitely improve reception. So will a preselector, and so will a step-attenuator, once you learn to use it. But for $15, what have you got to lose? It might work, you can let us know if you try it.

Best regards,

Jack

Thanks Jack. But I think you looked at the price of the power supply, which is $14.95
The tuner is $89.95

I have written a .NET application that will display various times around the world, does anyone use the computer near their radio and would like to have something like this?

If so what features would people expect? Let me know and I will try to put something together.

A wile I baught this nice BIG tight LED $9.99 clock in Raindew, I then looked up the IC data.
All I had to do is ground 1 pin and it went to 24 Hr mode. Trick is the clock must be a full 4 digit display (not a 3-1/2).
Many IC's will do this.

I picked up a regular clock for two or three dollars in a yard sale and cut twelve small squares of freezer tape to stick by the other numbers. Numbered them from 13 to 23 plus 00. Works great as long as I put one "C" battery in it about once a year.

I've tried a variety of antenna tuners and preselectors.

If you're looking for more knobs to twiddle, they're great.

But I prefer impedance matching transformers.

No knobs to twiddle, no need for batteries or an AC adapter, and they seem to work at least as well with my radios and antennas.

The IG said "the awards approval process was properly followed." That process includes an investigation into the facts to justify such awards.

The awards process includes an investigation or review of the facts and circumstances to justify an award. The Admiral made that very clear when he said an "additional review" today would not be productive. He also made it very clear in that same paragraph that any review included the "facts and circumstances" of the events. Those who did review the "facts and circumstances" thirty years ago found that Kerry did deserve those medals. That should be more than enough to satisfy all but the most fanatical.

We need to do a Jihad on you. That would solve at least one problem, then we can go from there.

Is there a means of testing a 9:1 0r 10:1 balun to make sure it is the proper impeadance?

Mark...Can you be specific on what type and/or impeadance of the transformer you are using?  Also what antennas are you using it on?

IMHO..... for receive only I would not bother with one. If you want the maximum signal transfer then a tuner will make the receiver see the proper impedence... therefore more signal. Also more noise. Signal/noise ratio is what matters for a receiver. I very rarely run my receivers without the RF gain reduced 25-40% depending on noise.

In the last ARRL 160 meter CW contest I operated in....2001... I did not have a beverage or any "special receive" antenna. Turns out a 5 element Force12 Yagi for the 10 meter band @ 50 feet was the best.....lowest signal/noise ratio....for most of the 1100 or so stations I worked. What was the impedence mismatch? Beats me.... but it worked .

I use an old Grove MiniTun3. It has all of 2 knobs one to select a frequency range the other to tune for best signal. It woorks well from 500 kHz to 30 mHz. I find it most usefull on lower frequencies in particular below 4 mHz. It use it with my 135 foot longwire that goes to my ICOM and Drake receivers. It is not a cure all but helps

Considering the radios  you own, the only thing you will gain is the right to say you have a Drake.

Yes, there is, but it takes some special equipment. The best bet is to have the proper toroid, wind it according to the formula and you shouldn't have any problem.

I have a 66 foot multiband dipole under my eves. The only way one can see it is to get within about two feet of the house and look under there. If someone from your homeowners association spots it and complains, make a deal with them. They let you keep the antenna or you file charges for trespassing.

friend- terminate the balun in a 450 Ohm (9:1) or 510 Ohm (10:1) resistor and tune across HF bands - you should see a low VSWR. Note that toroidal transformers have quite a narrow bandwidth over which they are actually 9:1.
Binocular cores will increase this BW over 10X.

Score one for Diverd. Until people start figuring out that the line the government is feeding them is just that, a line, this crap will continue.
Who're we going to invade next?

I'd say you should get started on fixing THIS problem first. Appears as though you've gained a certain amount of infamy in 'Philadelphia"

LOL, some kids have way to much time on their hands!

But, I'm guessing you might enjoy looking at that sort of thing, don't you?

Thanks...
IMHO, Think we should invade no one; Big Weapon Systems are NOT the way to fight smalll bands of techno savvy terrorists, who are living in The West, or being supplied with funds from Saudi Arabia, Syria or Iran;

In the end, Invading Iraq on the basis of Bogus intelligence has helped no one but Iran, Syria And Osama Bin Laden...

This is true. But if the documents are forged, then they cannot be used to support the charges in them.

> Nobody can show the documents are forged.

Actually, several people have suggest that there was no typewriter that could do propotional spacing (I wonder about the MagCard though.)
And that no typewriter had a superscript feature that would cause the superscript letters to be smaller in size than the other letters in the document.

I don't like W., but this is not going to help.

Hi hi, maybe so Sanjaya, sorry if that's the case. For $89 maybe you need some coaching, lol. I will add that I use a few MFJ products and have been very happy with them. Not everyone is, as eidenced by the eHam rviews. Seems some folks have bad experiences. But my tuners by MFJ work very well.

best regards,

Jack

I would need more information from you on the model. I would get a report on the fixture before I bought it. Basically it comes down to how the current for the bulb is regulated in the amount of EMI generated.

Some RFI is generated by the bulb plasma when conditions are not good for the bulb. You might want to just buy one unit and test it with a radio. The problem is that things may change as the fixture ages. The unit unit might not be a problem until later in its life.

It sounds like someone playing Pong. 0401 UTC. It's got another strange swishing sound in it, at least to my receiver. It's also audible either side of that frequency.

New Zealand has been very strong this evening until this time 4:00 UTC and I expect they should sound very good on 11820 about a hour from now.

Australia very strong on 15515 also. Very good reception this evening where as this morning things were poor.

No logic, no basis to his premise and totally unconvincing.

If you have not figured it out yet that makes you a loser.

Some invades the US because they want to change the government. They tell you to just let them do it and they'll leave. What would you do? Fight? You couldn't do that, you would then be a terrorist.

This is disgusting not to mention libelous. You can't put stuff like this up on the Internet without causing problems. If I was Steve I would be calling an attorney.

The reasons given were not even the real reason for going into Iraq. If you remember, it was announced that we were going to do it and no reason was given. It was about two weeks later that the supposed reason was announced. The intelligence was shaky and they new it but decided to go with it as they had to say something. Of course, the Brits jumped all over it with their usual me too attitude. Thought it might make them look good and figured that, with the US beside them, the chances of getting their asses kicked were slim.

Thanks, I don't know any specs about them yet, as the first sets we got turned out to be plug-ins and we need the hard-wired type. They are expensive, and purportedly have advantages that the XYL's like. Fwiw, I never experienced anymore than barely noticeable interference from flourescent lights new or old, incl one within inches of my equipment. But dimmer switches and sodium (security) lamps can sound like a buzz-saw.

It's listed by Mark Fine in the Smart-R8 software for the Drake as "Navy

What you're hearing is almost certainly CODAR transmissions. They are a radio-based method of tracking shifting dunes and eroding coastlines at saltwater beaches. The technology is used on both coasts of the USA. In the DX hobby press, you'll see these signals referred to as "the swisher" or "space zapper". They usually are centered on 4800, but are audible some ten's of kilohertz either side.

I hear CODAR fairly strong at home, but on coastal DXpeditions the racket is really annoying in the lower half of 60 meters.

Actually, that's been shown to be untrue. IBM had two models at the time with the superscript feature. There was another typewriter manufacturer that had one as well.

Of course, that doesn't mean the documents are genuine. Only that they could be.

This whole thing wasn't really all that interesting to me until the fake/real brewhaha broke out; it was already well known bush didn't show up where he was supposed to be. Old, boring "news".

But what interests me now is the fact that "everyone" seems to "know" the documents are fake, yet no one can seem to prove it. Seems to me it would be pretty easy for a well experienced document expert.

Then again, maybe it's just timing. Could be that the republicans have just such an expert with proof positive that they're fake but figure it's too early to release. Considering the short attention span and ignorance of the typical American voter, it would make more sense to expose it around October 31st.

Antenna tuners for receive have not been very useful in my experience, nor have preamps. The exception is trying to work full duplex on marine radios, then you need a good preselector so that your xmtr does not totally overwhelm the rcvr that is tuned to a nearby freq. It is easy to be fooled by preamps, they make things louder, but they normally amplify noise as much as signal so you are not gaining in S/N ratio. Similarly, antenna tuners give you a peak and you get excited, but compare it to an untuned longwire and you wont hear any difference in most cases. In the case of poorly designed rcvrs, a tuner or tuned preamp might help make up for poor front end design, but with a good rcvr, they just dont do much in my experience. Read a good communications electronics book about noise floor and what it really means. You'll see that there is no magic bullet for reducing random incoherent noise. DSP can work wonders in removing non random noise (hetrodynes, spectral notches, etc). Digital modulation can also work wonders in giving noise free comms. But, when all is said and done noise is random and random stuff is hard to remove. Its all about entropy and electrons. Directional antennas... now there is a way to improve SN, big time in some cases.

A tuner solves a specific problem. If you don't have that problem it's not going to help much. The problem is selectivity. If your radio has enough for your listening situation then the tuner will not do much for you other than boost the signal a little that you are trying to hear. The tuner will reduce the other signals above and below where it is tuned to your radio.

There are various types of tuners that behave somewhat differently but this is the GENERIC explanation for them.

You can the maximum benefit from a tuner if it is used to resonate an ordinarily non-resonant antenna like a random wire Marconi type antenna. For this to work well the wire is directly connected to the tuner and then the tuner is connected by coax to the radio. The tuner changes the ELECTRICAL LENGTH of the wire so it resonates at some frequency. The boost from using the tuner to resonate the wire can make the difference between hearing a very weak signal or helping to make it more legible if it is next to a much stronger station on a nearby channel.

It is basically a DX'ing tool used to tweak the antenna situation in order to get the weakest of stations.

Light dimmers are a big enemy of AM BCB or SW listeners which create some of the worst interference listeners have to deal with. Those units use solid state switches with very fast rise times for efficiency that are rich in harmonics. The impulse from these can overwhelm a radios front end causing intermodulation in the radio. The intermod products can ruin the entire spectrum the radio is capable of tuning.

If you're using a portable receiver with a fairly long external antenna, a passive preselector would be the most useful device between the antenna and receiver. It would help to eliminate the symptoms of signal overloading caused by insufficient dynamic range in the receiver. I used a preselector with the Sony-2010, connected to an inverted-L antenna. It made a big difference with reducing intermod's.

Quality table-top receivers like the Drake-R8, Icom-R75, AOR-7030 and many others, don't need a pre-selector or antenna tuner to enhance reception. They work very well when connected directly to a well designed external antenna. My R8B uses an inverted-L with a good 'RF' grounding system to reduce the noise from domestic sources like televisions and computers. Keeping the noise down is more important than getting the last bit of energy from the antenna with a tuner.

BTW- The MFJ-959C is "for receive only" because it's componants can't handle the power from a transmitter. Universal is not trying to give their opinion on whether you should or should not use an antenna tuner for receiving.

New Zealand was very good until about 04:40 when they faded out altogether. At 05:00 when they switched to 11820 they were good at first then the signal faded. Australia no longer heard either.

The main problem I have with your argument is the USA is not Iraq. I understand the effort of looking at both sides disagreement by reversing the situation but the logic of it does not follow unfortunately.

Missing is the motivations of all involved. We have the most freedom of any nation and if someone invaded to change it then that would be a step down for us. The intent in Iraq is to start a democracy where the individual will have more freedom or more say in his life. The people that are against that are the people that want to control everyone else and subjugate them.

I had nothing to do with it. It looks like a search engine or something that collects newsgroup stuff. That picture first appeared right in this group...good old dxAce alienated somebody named Curmudgeon and things got out of hand.

Posting binaries to newsgroups is bad form...as is pornography in general. I still can't figure out why it's called 'Adult' entertainment when the vast majority of it's consumers are emotionally and mentally underdeveloped types. The producers of that crap should be horse whipped down in the village square.

Well, I can see that the Kerry clan still has not learned the lesson that the politics of foreign policy disagreements should stay at home in the USA. Here is an example of meddling in the current administrations policy. Diana Kerry should get in trouble over this.

The fact that the 'intelligence' services had to plagiarize a student's ten year old web page as evidence for an invasion SHOULD have been a tip off....

There have been at LEAST two elections in Iraq that have been canceled by the occupiers because their guy would have LOST. Is that 'democracy'?

The amount of torture down in the name of this 'democracising' is obscene. Why are they hiding all the new pictures?

The helicopter gunships shooting down scores of unarmed civilians really helps to win hearts and minds. Right...it's working in the stolen areas of Palestine too.

What about the bounty hunters setting up their own private torture centres? The one guy said his connections went right up to the White House..you know what? I believe him.

The unscrupulous, money hungry, immoral bastards have perverted the most sacred of your institutions and YOU still believe every single bit of bullshit they throw your way. Wake up before it's too late.

I would truly enjoy meeting and talking with an experienced short wave radio operator located in Malibu, CA.  As a newbie to shortwave radio it would be great seeing and listening firsthand to a quality setup.

Iraq is not "stabilized" yet. Stuff like this is going to happen.

I don't know what you are implying here.

> The helicopter gunships shooting down scores of unarmed civilians really helps to win hearts and minds. Right...it's working in the stolen areas of Palestine too.

War is always bad news. Sometimes innocent people get killed here in the USA when cops chase and shoot at the criminals. Do you want the cops to stop doing their job? This is just the result of using force. I could get killed any day I drive the freeway to work because some idiot can't control his several ton vehicle at all times.

They have been arrested and are going to trial. The white house connection story is just BS to save their behinds.

You are going to believe criminals that torture people over what comes out of the White house? This is misguided at best.

Well then you may want to talk to:

Stewart H. MacKenzie, WDX6AA
"World Friendship Through Shortwave Radio Where Culture and Language Meet" ASWLC - http://groups.yahoo.com/group/ASWLC/
SCADS - http://groups.yahoo.com/group/SCADS/

Stewart is in Huntington beach and sometimes has meetings at his house. I've never attended one myself.

Did a lot of side by side comparisons with my Sony SW77 portable. With Sony AN-1 and AN-LP1 antennas it  turned out that the Palstar R30CC was inferior in both SW and MW DX. This was the case with both antennas in a noisy city environment. In a quiet country setting it was a more even match but the Palstar never beat the Sony. OTOH, the SW77 pulled in numerous stations that were not listenable with the Palstar. I'm especially surprised about the MW results because the Palstar is supposed to be a hot rig for that and the SW77 is not. I really liked the Palstar on its own, but now I realize that the receiver has serious shortcomings. For starters it really needs a sync detector to be competitive at its price. Simplicity is not always an asset.

Now I wonder if the Palstar would even be worthy of a Sherwood SE-3 or should I just ebay it right away. I guess I could always keep the SE-3 for my other radios even if the Palstar failed with it.

Any opinions would be appreciated.

Cheers,

Margaret

PS. The SW77 is a darn good radio and the Passport is clueless!

Do you truly believe the senior officers who awarded Kerry's medals some 30 years ago failed to properly review the facts and circumstances of the events surrounding those medals?

"In particular, the senior officers who awarded the medals were properly delegated authority to do so. In addition, we found that they correctly followed the procedures in place at the time for approving these awards." - Navy I.G.
Vice Admiral Ronald A. Route

Perhaps you don't understand military procedures. The mission commander (OIC as you call it) had no authority whatsoever to approve or deny a medal. That authority rests with much more senior officers. At the very most, the mission commander can initiate the paperwork for a medal, or, in the situation you describe, refuse to initiate that paperwork. Regardless, he is never the final word. If he refused, as you say, Kerry had a right under military regulations to take the matter up with a higher authority. And, if what you say is actually true about the mission commander refusing to initiate the paperwork, clearly that higher authority disagreed with that mission commander and decided instead to initiate the paperwork himself. At least two even more senior Navy officers, co-signers of that paperwork as it traveled through the chain-of-command, agreed with that higher authority, as did the office of the Admiral of the Navy when those medals were finally granted.

> (snip)  However, I reserve the right to judge > behind the back of the commander that

Well, you're certainly free to judge people anyway you choose. However, I'll repeat again that the mission commander had no authority to deny Kerry an award. A mission commander can only initiate or not initiate paperwork. The authority to approve or deny awards rests with officers much more senior than that mission commander. Further, I'll repeat again that the mission commander is not the final word even when it comes to that paperwork. Everyone within the military has a right to appeal decisions through the chain-of-command. In Kerry's case, if that is indeed what Kerry did, that higher ranking officer in that chain-of-command clearly agreed with Kerry, not the mission commander.

> (snip)  It gives the appearance that Kerry

Military procedures would again dispute that. First, I'm not aware of any situation where a junior officer would be allowed to file paperwork for his own awards. Normal military procedure expects paperwork to be filed by a superior. Second, when signing paperwork for any medal, each signing officer, through the chain-of-command, attests to a review of the facts and circumstances described, and compliance of those facts and circumstances with the award requirements under applicable military regulations. Vice Admiral Route, when reviewing the paperwork for Kerry's medals, said correct procedures were followed in the approval of those awards. That would include the initial paperwork on file all the way up to the final signitures of the granting authority.

We had a sodium-vapour lamp on the way out, in our street. I noticed on my radios a very strong periodic crackling noise. Thought I might have something burning out somewhere. So I used a small Sony radio (7600A) to hunt down the problem. I found that when I went out in the street, away from the house, the noise got louder. I found myself standing underneath the lamp when it went off. (Of course, it came back on a couple of minutes later, as these kind of lamps do that when they are dying).

I reported it to the power company and now all is well!

Wow, sounds like a fab place to be! And some great DX to be had obviously.
Well done.

(I'll just have to be happy with listening to Suva, Fiji, on 558 kHz, which is not far from here, Auckland, New Zealand).

There were several version of the ICF 2010 / ICF 2001D. But some of the versions of the ICF2001D were identical to the ICF 2010. I have such an example. It has full frequency coverage, full air band and a power supply that has a switchable voltage selector so you can travel anywhere with it.

So sometimes, the only difference is the model number on the front!

It's been suggested that while IBM had machines that could do a superscript feature, the letters were merely set up above the baseline. They weren't actually smaller than the rest of the type. If this is wrong, if IBM or someone else had a feature that would make SMALLER superscript letters. Then the question is still viable.

SANJAYA,

The Age Old SWL'ers Question:
Do I Need a Antenna Tuner ? -or- a Pre-Selector ?

The MFJ-959 is OK for what it does. The one feature that would interest me would be the ability to use it with Two (2) Radios and Two (2) Antennas. Switch between the Radios and Antennas. The built-in Amplifier can be helpful for hearing weak signals.

If you are using a simply Random Wire Antenna or any Antenna with a 'direct' Coax Cable Feed-in-Line. The MFJ-959 should help in 'matching' you Antenna to the Radio's Input and improving your signal transfer.

HOWEVER - If you are using an Improved SWL Random Wire Antenna that uses a 9:1 Matching Transformer (Balun / MLB) then you may not see any real 'improvement' in your receive signal.

This is the so called "Low Noise" SWL Antenna.
[ Please READ These Three Links ]
http://www.anarc.org/naswa/badx/antennas/low-noise_antenna.html
http://www.anarc.org/naswa/badx/antennas/SWL_longwire.html http://www.anarc.org/naswa/badx/antennas/grounding.html
ABOUT THE "LOW NOISE" ANTENNA 'DESIGN CONCEPTS':
A Random Wire Antenna Element coupled via a 9:1 Matching Transformer at the Near-End of the Antenna with a Ground Rod and Coax Cable Feed-in-Line to the Receiver. This is the basic SWL Antenna that uses the "Low Noise Antenna" 'design concepts' that were popularized by John Doty.

You may also wish to consider these two other MFJ Products:
* MFJ-1045C SWL Receiver Pre-Selector with built-in Amplifier which covers the Shortwave Bands from 1.8 to 54 MHz.
http://www.universal-radio.com/catalog/preamps/0807.html
* MFJ-1020C Indoor Active Antenna which covers 300 kHz to 40 MHz (LW, AM/MW and SW Bands) in five bands; and when used with an External (OutSide) Antenna, the MFJ-1020C functions as a Pre-Selector.
http://www.universal-radio.com/catalog/sw_ant/1413.html

FWIW: I use a Low Noise SWL Antenna with a Grove Mini-Tuner "TUN 3" which is very much like the MFJ-956 MFJ-956 Long Wave, Medium Wave and Shortwave Pre-Selector Tuner.
http://www.universal-radio.com/catalog/preamps/2964.html
- Most times I simply use it in the ByPass Mode.
- Sometimes I will switch it over ti Fine-Tune a Signal.
- The major reason I use it is to Switch-Out "Ground-Out" the Antenna when I am not using the Radio for Safety.

RadioNews,

If the polls continue to show President George "W" Bush ahead of Senator John 'ff' Kerry by 4%-6% Nation-Wide and "IF" the projected Electoral College Vote is about Bush~320 and Kerry~218.

Then it is thought that some (many) Democrat Voters may not go to the Polls and Vote.

IF (Big 'If') this happens then it will cost the Democrats in both the US House and US Senate elections.  Resulting in a 'loss' of Seats in both the US House and US Senate.

John 'ff' Kerry may not only "GO DOWN" but he may also take the Democrat's in the US House and US Senate with him.
BIG TIME !

John 'ff' Kerry may end-up being a Bigger Electoral Disaster than Al Gore was in 2000 for the Democrats.

Damn right. It'll be a lot better than four years under the rudderless Kerry.

Let's see, would those be the Swift Boat fellows who support Kerry? Questions have been asked about the 254 getting 'cash or jobs', so how about those who support Kerry? Are they getting 'cash or jobs'?

Radio Man wrote:

> Mark...Can you be specific on what type and/or impeadance of the transformer you are using?  Also what antennas are you using it on?

I mostly use 9:1 impedance matching transformers I wound myself according to the directions on CW's web site.

<http://www.kc7nod.20m.com/new_page_1.htm>

On antennas:

#1 is out at the moment because of a lightning strike a few weeks ago and I've been too busy to get it replaced - but it was a 65' random wire made with #14 wire that's 225 feet away from my house (and farther from the neighbors)  The coax is underground.  It gets practically no RFI. I'm sure it would work almost as well if it was 60-70 feet away from the house, but I don't have tall sturdy trees there.

Here's a web site with a discussion of this type of antenna.

#2 is a triangular horizontal loop antenna that's partially over the house.  It was made with about 150 feet of #14 wire.  Loops are low noise designs, but my house is filled with gizmos that cause rfi, so it's not my favorite.  It has a 4:1 impedance matching transformer.

#3 was my first antenna at the house - it's 40 feet of wire stapled to the rafters in my attic.  It's closer to the RFI and I haven't used it in years.  9:1 transformer.

#4 is my current camping and vacation antenna.  It's a 3 meter folding whip originally intended for a PRC-25 or PRC-77 with a 9:1 impedance matching transformer that mounts onto a photographic tripod. It works quite well.

#5 is an Electro-Metrics ALR-25 Loop. I still need to create a control box to switch bands on it electrically, but ultimately, this may become the "portable" antenna for places I can drive to where I need to use an indoor antenna. This has it's own impedance matching circuitry built in.

I have some extra #43 ferrite's on hand that are a little smaller than the one CW's design calls for. They work well. If you'd like one, you can have it for the price of a small padded mailing bag and a couple of stamps. Contact me directly for details.

I'vr own one for over a year. It works good on local AM/FM stations and also on the masjor SW Broadcasters with very little drifting. When outside I use one of yhose rollup antennas with an alligator clip to attach it to the radio . With the rollup antenna, I keep the antenna down except for about 1/2 inch to clip to as there is no swivel. Battery lifes is excellent and only replaced the 2 AA's three times since owning it. The tuning knob is "stiff" but thats better then free spinning on a small radio.

Hearing RRI Fak Fak for the past several days on 4789.95, but at a reduced level compared to the way it was in the last few weeks.

Heard this morning with SCI at 1200, then into news.

I also did a lot of comparisons using my R30cc against jrc 535D, R8, and a Sattellit 800, and was very dissapointed, the only way it was comparable was using a SE-3 and a kiwa shortwave preamp, the only advantage is its portability

E-bay it. If you're a sync freak now, then you'll be a sync freak six months down the road. If you leave the radio on all the time and align the radio, you might or might not be able to make do with ECSS. I know that I use ECSS a lot less than I would have used a sync detector, given the 20-Hz tuning steps on the Palstar. I use it only when the fades are deep enough to make things relatively unintelligible.

As for reception issues, grounding would be a cheap way to see if you want to keep the radio. The AC adaptor provides a fair deal of ground but not as much as you might want. Pound either a) one 10-foot ground rod or b) two hollow 10-foot copper pipes into the ground, wire the ground rod(s) to the ground post on the Palstar, and see if that makes a difference. If it doesn't work, hey, you can still use that ground to ground your home stereo, or you can ground the Superadio III that you might also consider for MW DX.

I've had little luck getting good MW DX from the low-impedance antenna jack on the Palstar, at least not the right way. On most dipoles of sane length--I'm talking from 126 feet down to the 30 feet that mine is at present, with lots of stops in between--the Palstar sucks on MW unless I put only the center pin into the connector. My best results have been with a) very long wires hooked up to the high-impedance antenna jack, b) a Select-A-Tenna Hardwire Edition (to the same jack), and c) about fifty feet of wire wrapped through a hula hoop (again, to the same jack). All but b) require a good ground.

As for SW, I use the dipoles that I've always used, and they work much better than for my other radios. However, I did get to run it at a relative's ham shack, with a long dipole, a vertical, a short dipole, and a Windom at my disposal; and the Palstar kept up with the rigs in his shack without problem. I came home and felt that at least some of my setup was lacking, as usual. That's what happens when a 11-year SWL goes and plays in a veteran ham environment.

according to this book the band between 6235.0 kHz and 6259.0 kHz comprises 7 ship station channels of 4kHz width. and are for fax and data and other special transmissions...

THE NEWS MEDIA
CBS News Concludes It Was Misled on National Guard Memos, Network Officials Say
By JIM RUTENBERG

fter days of expressing confidence about the documents used in a "60 Minutes'' report that raised new questions about President Bush's National Guard service, CBS News officials have grave doubts about the authenticity of the material, network officials said last night.

The officials, who asked not to be identified, said CBS News would most likely make an announcement as early as today that it had been deceived about the documents' origins. CBS News has already begun intensive reporting on where they came from, and people at the network said it was now possible that officials would open an internal inquiry into how it moved forward with the report. Officials say they are now beginning to believe the report was too flawed to have gone on the air.

But they cautioned that CBS News could still pull back from an announcement. Officials met last night with Dan Rather, the anchor who presented the report, to go over the information it had collected about the documents one last time before making a final decision. Mr. Rather was not available for comment late last night.

The report relied in large part on four memorandums purported to be from the personal file of Mr. Bush's squadron commander, Lt. Col. Jerry B. Killian, who died 20 years ago. The memos, dated from the early 1970's, said that Colonel Killian was under pressure to "sugar coat'' the record of the young Lieutenant Bush and that the officer had disobeyed a direct order to take a physical.

Mr. Rather and others at the network are said to still believe that the sentiment in the memos accurately reflected Mr. Killian's feelings but that the documents' authenticity was now in grave doubt.

The developments last night marked a dramatic turn for CBS News, which for a week stood steadfastly by its Sept. 8 report as various document experts asserted that the typeface of the memos could have been produced only by a modern-day word processor, not Vietnam War-era typewriters.

The seemingly unflappable confidence of Mr. Rather and top news division officials in the documents allayed fears within the network and created doubt among some in the news media at large that those specialists were correct. CBS News officials had said they had reason to be certain that the documents indeed had come from the personal file of Colonel Killian.

Sandy Genelius, a network spokeswoman, said last week, "We are confident about the chain of custody; we're confident in how we secured the documents.''

But officials decided yesterday that they would most likely have to declare that they had been misled about the records' origin after Mr. Rather and a top network executive, Betsy West, met in Texas with a man who was said to have helped the news division obtain the memos, a former Guard officer named Bill Burkett.

Mr. Rather interviewed Mr. Burkett on camera this weekend, and several people close to the reporting process said his answers to Mr. Rather's questions led officials to conclude that their initial confidence that the memos had come from Mr. Killian's own files was not warranted. These people indicated that Mr. Burkett had previously led the producer of the piece, Mary Mapes, to have the utmost confidence in the material.

It was unclear last night if Mr. Burkett had told Mr. Rather that he had been misled about the documents' provenance or that he had been the one who did the misleading.

In an e-mail message yesterday, Mr. Burkett declined to answer any questions about the documents.

Yesterday, Emily J. Will, a document specialist who inspected the records for CBS News and said last week that she had raised concerns about their authenticity with CBS News producers, confirmed a report in Newsweek that a producer had told her that the source of the documents said they had been obtained anonymously and through the mail.

In an interview last night she declined to name the producer who told her this but said the producer was in a position to know. CBS News officials have disputed her contention that she warned the network the night before the initial "60 Minutes'' report that it would face questions from documents experts.

In the coming days CBS News officials plan to focus on how the network moved ahead with the report when there were warning signs that the memorandums were not genuine.

Ms. Will is one of two documents experts consulted by the network who said they raised doubts about the material before the segment was broadcast. Another expert, Marcel B. Matley, said in interviews that he had vouched only for Colonel Killian's signatures on the records and not the authenticity of the records themselves. Mr. Matley said he could not rule out that the signatures had been cut and pasted from official records pertaining to Colonel Killian.

In examining where the network had gone wrong, officials at CBS News turning their attention to Ms. Mapes, one of their most respected producers, who was riding particularly high this year after breaking news about the Abu Ghraib prison scandal for the network.

In a telephone interview this weekend, Josh Howard, the executive producer of the "60 Minutes'' Wednesday edition, said that he did not initially know who was Ms. Mapes' primary source for the documents but that he did not see any reason to doubt them. He said he believed Ms. Mapes and her team had appropriately answered all questions about the documents' authenticity and, he noted, no one seemed to be casting doubt upon the essential thrust of the report.

"The editorial story line was still intact, and still is, to this day,'' he said, "and the reporting that was done in it was by a person who has turned in decades of flawless reporting with no challenge to her credibility.''

He added, "We in management had no sense that the producing team wasn't completely comfortable with the results of the document analysis.''

Ms. Mapes has not responded to requests for comment.

Mr. Howard also said in the interview that the White House did not dispute the veracity of the documents when it was presented to them on the morning of the report. That reaction, he said, was "the icing on the cake'' of the other reporting the network was conducting on the documents. White House officials have said they saw no reason to challenge documents being presented by a credible news organization.

Several people familiar with the situation said they were girding for a particularly tough week for Mr. Rather and the news division should the network announce its new doubts.

One person close to the situation said the critical question would be, "Where was everybody's judgment on that last day?''

So what?

Nobody can refute that what they say is factual.

Someone who had access to the information could have compiled them as a summary when Bush's thugs started destroying the originals.  That person would be a hero.

They're merely mistaken.

Again, it's the bushkultie's whining about things the bushkultie doesn't understand, which in no way refutes the contents of the documents showing that Bush is a disgrace to the US military.
He's proven that subsequently, as well.

Good points.

One can't help but notice Bush's total incapacity to refute the contents.

That's what counts.

The Bush WH has released other documents with the same feature.

It would most likely be Trans World Radio in Polish directed to Eastern Europe.
They use 6235 and 7380 between 0515 and 0530, transmitters in Albania. This transmission appears to be 7 days a week.

Monday through Friday at 0530 they apparently switch to Slovak till 0545 on 6235 via Albania and 7210 via Germany.

What counts is your are a fucking moron:

a) Bush has refuted the contents

b) CASE CLOSED:

THE NEWS MEDIA
CBS News Concludes It Was Misled on National Guard Memos, Network Officials Say
By JIM RUTENBERG

fter days of expressing confidence about the documents used in a "60

Minutes'' report that raised new questions about President Bush's National Guard service, CBS News officials have grave doubts about the authenticity of the material, network officials said last night.

The officials, who asked not to be identified, said CBS News would most likely make an announcement as early as today that it had been deceived about the documents' origins. CBS News has already begun intensive reporting on where they came from, and people at the network said it was now possible that officials would open an internal inquiry into how it moved forward with the report. Officials say they are now beginning to believe the report was too flawed to have gone on the air.

But they cautioned that CBS News could still pull back from an announcement. Officials met last night with Dan Rather, the anchor who presented the report, to go over the information it had collected about the documents one last time before making a final decision. Mr. Rather was not available for comment late last night.

The report relied in large part on four memorandums purported to be from the personal file of Mr. Bush's squadron commander, Lt. Col. Jerry B. Killian, who died 20 years ago. The memos, dated from the early 1970's, said that Colonel Killian was under pressure to "sugar coat'' the record of the young Lieutenant Bush and that the officer had disobeyed a direct order to take a physical.

Mr. Rather and others at the network are said to still believe that the sentiment in the memos accurately reflected Mr. Killian's feelings but that the documents' authenticity was now in grave doubt.

The developments last night marked a dramatic turn for CBS News, which for a week stood steadfastly by its Sept. 8 report as various document experts asserted that the typeface of the memos could have been produced only by a modern-day word processor, not Vietnam War-era typewriters.

The seemingly unflappable confidence of Mr. Rather and top news division officials in the documents allayed fears within the network and created doubt among some in the news media at large that those specialists were correct. CBS News officials had said they had reason to be certain that the documents indeed had come from the personal file of Colonel Killian.

Sandy Genelius, a network spokeswoman, said last week, "We are confident about the chain of custody; we're confident in how we secured the documents.''

But officials decided yesterday that they would most likely have to declare that they had been misled about the records' origin after Mr. Rather and a top network executive, Betsy West, met in Texas with a man who was said to have helped the news division obtain the memos, a former Guard officer named Bill Burkett.

Mr. Rather interviewed Mr. Burkett on camera this weekend, and several people close to the reporting process said his answers to Mr. Rather's questions led officials to conclude that their initial confidence that the memos had come from Mr. Killian's own files was not warranted. These people indicated that Mr. Burkett had previously led the producer of the piece, Mary Mapes, to have the utmost confidence in the material.

It was unclear last night if Mr. Burkett had told Mr. Rather that he had been misled about the documents' provenance or that he had been the one who did the misleading.

In an e-mail message yesterday, Mr. Burkett declined to answer any questions about the documents.

Yesterday, Emily J. Will, a document specialist who inspected the records for CBS News and said last week that she had raised concerns about their authenticity with CBS News producers, confirmed a report in Newsweek that a producer had told her that the source of the documents said they had been obtained anonymously and through the mail.

In an interview last night she declined to name the producer who told her this but said the producer was in a position to know. CBS News officials have disputed her contention that she warned the network the night before the initial "60 Minutes'' report that it would face questions from documents experts.

In the coming days CBS News officials plan to focus on how the network moved ahead with the report when there were warning signs that the memorandums were not genuine.

Ms. Will is one of two documents experts consulted by the network who said they raised doubts about the material before the segment was broadcast. Another expert, Marcel B. Matley, said in interviews that he had vouched only for Colonel Killian's signatures on the records and not the authenticity of the records themselves. Mr. Matley said he could not rule out that the signatures had been cut and pasted from official records pertaining to Colonel Killian.

In examining where the network had gone wrong, officials at CBS News turning their attention to Ms. Mapes, one of their most respected producers, who was riding particularly high this year after breaking news about the Abu Ghraib prison scandal for the network.

In a telephone interview this weekend, Josh Howard, the executive producer of the "60 Minutes'' Wednesday edition, said that he did not initially know who was Ms. Mapes' primary source for the documents but that he did not see any reason to doubt them. He said he believed Ms. Mapes and her team had appropriately answered all questions about the documents' authenticity and, he noted, no one seemed to be casting doubt upon the essential thrust of the report.

"The editorial story line was still intact, and still is, to this day,'' he said, "and the reporting that was done in it was by a person who has turned in decades of flawless reporting with no challenge to her credibility.''

He added, "We in management had no sense that the producing team wasn't completely comfortable with the results of the document analysis.''

Ms. Mapes has not responded to requests for comment.

Mr. Howard also said in the interview that the White House did not dispute the veracity of the documents when it was presented to them on the morning of the report. That reaction, he said, was "the icing on the cake'' of the other reporting the network was conducting on the documents. White House officials have said they saw no reason to challenge documents being presented by a credible news organization.

Several people familiar with the situation said they were girding for a particularly tough week for Mr. Rather and the news division should the network announce its new doubts.

The memos, dated from the early 1970's, said that Colonel Killian was under pressure to "sugar coat'' the record of the young Lieutenant Bush and that the officer had disobeyed a direct order to take a physical.

Mr. Rather and others at the network are said to still believe that the sentiment in the memos accurately reflected Mr. Killian's feelings but that the documents' authenticity was now in grave doubt.

The developments last night marked a dramatic turn for CBS News, which for a week stood steadfastly by its Sept. 8 report as various document experts asserted that the typeface of the memos could have been produced only by a modern-day word processor, not Vietnam War-era typewriters.

The seemingly unflappable confidence of Mr. Rather and top news division officials in the documents allayed fears within the network and created doubt among some in the news media at large that those specialists were correct. CBS News officials had said they had reason to be certain that the documents indeed had come from the personal file of Colonel Killian.

Sandy Genelius, a network spokeswoman, said last week, "We are confident about the chain of custody; we're confident in how we secured the documents.''

But officials decided yesterday that they would most likely have to declare that they had been misled about the records' origin after Mr. Rather and a top network executive, Betsy West, met in Texas with a man who was said to have helped the news division obtain the memos, a former Guard officer named Bill Burkett.

Mr. Rather interviewed Mr. Burkett on camera this weekend, and several people close to the reporting process said his answers to Mr. Rather's questions led officials to conclude that their initial confidence that the memos had come from Mr. Killian's own files was not warranted. These people indicated that Mr. Burkett had previously led the producer of the piece, Mary Mapes, to have the utmost confidence in the material.

It was unclear last night if Mr. Burkett had told Mr. Rather that he had been misled about the documents' provenance or that he had been the one who did the misleading.

In an e-mail message yesterday, Mr. Burkett declined to answer any questions about the documents.

Yesterday, Emily J. Will, a document specialist who inspected the records for CBS News and said last week that she had raised concerns about their authenticity with CBS News producers, confirmed a report in Newsweek that a producer had told her that the source of the documents said they had been obtained anonymously and through the mail.

In an interview last night she declined to name the producer who told her this but said the producer was in a position to know. CBS News officials have disputed her contention that she warned the network the night before the initial "60 Minutes'' report that it would face questions from documents experts.

In the coming days CBS News officials plan to focus on how the network moved ahead with the report when there were warning signs that the memorandums were not genuine.

Ms. Will is one of two documents experts consulted by the network who said they raised doubts about the material before the segment was broadcast. Another expert, Marcel B. Matley, said in interviews that he had vouched only for Colonel Killian's signatures on the records and not the authenticity of the records themselves. Mr. Matley said he could not rule out that the signatures had been cut and pasted from official records pertaining to Colonel Killian.

In examining where the network had gone wrong, officials at CBS News turning their attention to Ms. Mapes, one of their most respected producers, who was riding particularly high this year after breaking news about the Abu Ghraib prison scandal for the network.

In a telephone interview this weekend, Josh Howard, the executive producer of the "60 Minutes'' Wednesday edition, said that he did not initially know who was Ms. Mapes' primary source for the documents but that he did not see any reason to doubt them. He said he believed Ms. Mapes and her team had appropriately answered all questions about the documents' authenticity and, he noted, no one seemed to be casting doubt upon the essential thrust of the report.

"The editorial story line was still intact, and still is, to this day,'' he said, "and the reporting that was done in it was by a person who has turned in decades of flawless reporting with no challenge to her credibility.''

He added, "We in management had no sense that the producing team wasn't completely comfortable with the results of the document analysis.''

Ms. Mapes has not responded to requests for comment.

Mr. Howard also said in the interview that the White House did not dispute the veracity of the documents when it was presented to them on the morning of the report. That reaction, he said, was "the icing on the cake'' of the other reporting the network was conducting on the documents. White House officials have said they saw no reason to challenge documents being presented by a credible news organization.

Several people familiar with the situation said they were girding for a particularly tough week for Mr. Rather and the news division should the network announce its new doubts.

(OT) Democrats are about to become French Toast

If the polls continue to show President George "W" Bush ahead of Senator John 'ff' Kerry by 4%-6% Nation-Wide and "IF" the projected Electoral College Vote is about Bush~330 and Kerry~208.

Electoral College Scoreboard: Bush Dominating Now Leads 336-202
http://www.washingtondispatch.com/page2/

Electoral College Trend
EC-TREND=> http://www.spacerad.com/electoral/trend_short.html

Then it is thought that some (many) Democrat Voters may not go to the Polls and Vote.

"IF" (Big 'If') this happens then it will cost the Democrats in both the US House and US Senate elections.  Resulting in a 'loss' of Demcorat Seats in both the US House and US Senate.

John 'ff' Kerry may not only "GO DOWN" {Be Toast} but he may also take the Democrat's in the US House and US Senate with him.
The Democrat's Running for Congress may be French Toast - BIG TIME !

John 'ff' Kerry may end-up being a Bigger Electoral Disaster in 2004 than Al Gore was in 2000 for the Democrats.

Dan Rather, Bill Burkett do a Re-Assembled Interview
TWD=>  http://www.washingtondispatch.com/page2/
-  The Washington Dispatch
-  19 September 2004
-  by CK Rairden

*  CBS News anchor Dan Rather has interviewed the retired lieutenant colonel widely believed to have helped provide "60 Minutes" with the disputed National Guard documents about President Bush that have created a credibility crisis for the network, and CBS plans to air the interview in the coming days.

*  The on-camera sit-down with Bill Burkett, who has urged Democratic activists to wage "war" against Republican "dirty tricks," could help resolve whether CBS continues to stand by its story or concedes the purported 30-year-old memos are forgeries, as numerous document experts have contended.

*  It's difficult to see how this can end in a good way for Dan Rather and CBS, no matter what Burkett coughs up.  He's been discredited thoroughly with his own writings as any kind of "source."

*  Burkett's comments in an August 25th published rant included, "[Mr. Bush] I know from your files that we have now reassembled, {Re-Created - Re-Manufactured} the fact that you did not fulfill your oath, taken when you were commissioned to "obey the orders of the officers appointed over you."

I was a recent evacuee from hurricane Ivan. My AM radio in my new truck (2004      ) lost reception of WWL AM after the first 150 miles.
This was not the case in my old truck (same      , different year.) I am looking for a new current       car stereo that has exceptional AM band reception. Anyone know of any?

It sounds to me like Google is going to "piggy back" their new service =

Personally, I think they're messing with a tried and true public forum =

YahooGroup's success and would like to get part of their "business".

At 1255, I had RRI Fak Fak with a good signal this morning during dawn enhancement of signals. The level seemed about the same as I've heard since the end of August.

I also noticed that ZLXA Levin (NZ) on 3935 continues stronger than in the past. For years they've had weak, watery audio or were only heard with a het, but lately their signal has been at the level it was in the early 1990s (ie., fair during decent DU openings).

Does it work better with the engine off?

(seriously.  Often the problem isn't a bad radio but a bad noise problem coming from elsewhere in the vehicle.)

What (other than blind hope) makes you say the contents have been fully verified?

Killian's family said the forged memos don't agree with the sentiments he expressed to them.

The retired General says nobody contacted him to get Bush into the guard - he was a desirable candidate.  He's also said he didn't contact Killian about Bush after he retired.

Hi,

Does anyone know if the Sony AN-LP1 Active Antenna is still available in the UK, and if so from where?

Thanks for any potential help

This morning I was in eastern NC scanning the SW dial because my "regular" station did not come in too well about 8:00 a.m.

I flipped to 9650 because I knew Seoul (? sp), S. Korea usually came in pretty well that time of day.  It came in very well, but I soon tired of it and flipped to a station that seemed to be promoting communism.

They told of Castro and how he prepared his people for Ivan the hurricane by going on air live about 3 or 4 hours per night for several nights prior to Ivan's arrival.  They boasted of the trucks coming and hauling off the people with their refrigerators, etc. so no one lost a life in Cuba (as opposed to several states in the U.S.A.) and not too much property damage to the occupants' personal property.  They didn't mention the real property - probably because communist countries don't allow much of it.  They probably lived in "government" housing.

They concluded by saying something like "Ivan is no match for Castro" but those are probably not the exact words.

Then came the announcement:  You are listening to NATIONAL PUBLIC RADIO! (I had pressed the FM button to get the local news.)  Isn't it nice that we spend years defending the world from communism and then our national public radio system boasts of how wonderful it is?

In case you doubt any of this or wish to have the exact wording you might need to contact NPR or check their web site.

DX is a term usually applied to distant, weak or otherwise challenging signals.

SWLing applies to any shortwave listening.

Good catch.
From Europe only 1314 from Norway, whch is almost the most remote from SA.
(1314 is during the night a collossal signal in Holland)

Perhaps the report was factually correct, and the Cuban people -were-appropriately prepared.  I'm not sure I see this as "promoting Communism;" Ivan is a big story, so what's a little fawning over Castro among friends.  IMO, NPR's obvious bias is usually as apparent in what they -don't- cover as in what they do.  I doubt, for example, that they're all too concerned with the dissidents in Castro's prisons.

CBS Plans New Memos Statement
NEW YORK, 20 SEPT 2004
http://www.cbsnews.com/stories/2004/09/06/politics/main641481.shtml

WHO IS CBS PROTECTING ?

WHAT - Did 60 Minutes Know ? {about the Forged Documents}

WHEN - Did Dan Rather Know It ? {about these Fake Documents}

HOW - Is 60 Minutes 'involvement' in/with these Forged Documents ?

WHY - Has 60 Minutes Not Acted to Tell the Truth ?
{about these Forged 'Fake' Documents}

*  According to The Washington Post, the network plans to say it was misled about the authenticity of the documents.

*  The New York Times reports that CBS News officials met Sunday evening with anchor Dan Rather, the reporter of the contested story, to discuss the network's next steps.

*  The Post and Times report that CBS' latest move comes after Rather met in Texas with Bill Burkett, a former Texas National Guard official who has been named as a possible source for the documents.

*  It was not clear if the network planned to apologize, the Post reported.

Here's a suggestion, hit a swap meet (or ebay) and get 1) rf signal generator and 2) a (digital) frequency counter.  When you're lost on the SR-III, (turn on and) adjust the generator (with the counter hooked up and working) until you get a heterodyne and then just read out the frequency.

The same thing could be done with a second receiver with a digital readout using the local oscillator, remembering to compensate for the IF offset.
I can do this with my R-1000 because is leaks a signal 455 kHz above the received frequency.  (It's not the LO, as the R-1000 first IF is 45.something MHz.  It's the signal used to drive the digital readout.
The frequency synthesizer board in the R-1000 is pretty baroque).

The same way they run their local TV stations.  I read that the local station's manager is proud of the fact that they don't even have a camera or studio.  What a waste of MHz.

RF can get into cables and equipment, and if there are nonlinear elements like diodes or transistors or a corroded connection, they can act upon the transmitted signals to create new signals and harmonics.

One time I was having huge problems with medium wave broadcast "intermod", where all over the dial there were mixtures of two or more of the local AM stations.  It turned out to be a corroded connection on the FM antenna for the hi=fi tuner.  So a system designed to receive 100 MHz signals was picking up 1 MHz signals, and spewing them all over 3-30 MHz range to a receiver that had no connection with the source.

Figure that any long piece of metal within 100 feet of your transmitting antenna is going to pick up (and reradiate) your signal, affecting your transmission.  And if it's not a very good piece of metal it can do strange things.  Roof flashing, railings, masts, guy wires ...

Also, if you have a TV signal booster on the antenna, it's getting hammered with quite a bit of signal.

CBS can't be trusted in any of this, no matter what they say at this point in time.

They, and Dan Blather were warned about the documents before they went to air with them. Then they tried a bit of CYA, that didn't work, now they are falling back on this story.

Burkett apparently gave the documents to CBS. But who gave them to Burkett?

Someone in the Kerry Kampaign?

Kerry is toast.

DRUDGE REPORT . Com
EXCLUSIVE // Mon Sep 20 2004 11:58:02 ET
SOURCE=>  http://www.drudgereport.com/

STATEMENT FROM DAN RATHER:

Last week, amid increasing questions about the authenticity of documents used in support of a 60 MINUTES WEDNESDAY story about President Bush's time in the Texas Air National Guard, CBS News vowed to re-examine the documents in question�and their source� vigorously. And we promised that we would let the American public know what this examination turned up, whatever the outcome.

Now, after extensive additional interviews, I no longer have the confidence in these documents that would allow us to continue vouching for them journalistically. I find we have been misled on the key question of how our source for the documents came into possession of these papers. That, combined with some of the questions that have been raised in public and in the press, leads me to a point where�if I knew then what I know now�I would not have gone ahead with the story as it was aired, and I certainly would not have used the documents in question.

But we did use the documents. We made a mistake in judgment, and for that I am sorry. It was an error that was made, however, in good faith and in the spirit of trying to carry on a CBS News tradition of investigative reporting without fear or favoritism.

Please know that nothing is more important to us than people's trust in our ability and our commitment to report fairly and truthfully.

CBS Plans New Memos Statement
http://www.cbsnews.com/stories/2004/09/06/politics/main641481.shtml

WHO IS CBS PROTECTING ?

WHAT - Did 60 Minutes Know ? {about the Forged Documents}

WHEN - Did Dan Rather Know It ? {about these Fake Documents}

HOW - Is 60 Minutes 'involvement' in/with these Forged Documents ?

WHY - Has 60 Minutes Not Acted to Tell the Truth ?
{about these Forged 'Fake' Documents}

*  According to The Washington Post, the network plans to say it was misled about the authenticity of the documents.

*  The New York Times reports that CBS News officials met Sunday evening with anchor Dan Rather, the reporter of the contested story, to discuss the network's next steps.

*  The Post and Times report that CBS' latest move comes after Rather met in Texas with Bill Burkett, a former Texas National Guard official who has been named as a possible source for the documents.

*  It was not clear if the network planned to apologize, the Post reported.

'Fairly and truthfully'? I've been LMAO ever since I read the statement.

Don't know if anyone mentioned removing the R-75's mw attenuator, which should help make the R-75 more amenable as an mw dx tool. Antenna orientation is a factor, also. Have a 130 ft. of 16 gauge wire, ground terminated for a beveredge effect. Is most efficient bringing in Bay Area & SoCal am'ers. But it's a bit  deaf  snagging Denver's flamethrower KOA , however.

Well thanks for that Mark. New Zealand also has some veteran DXer's who get the most amazing and mouthwatering catches from their Tiwai DX location near Invercargill. Have a look at http://radiodx.com  Also see Waianakarua DX site for more excellent catches.

Getting away for a serious DXpedition is great fun = highly recommended!

Calm down dude.  Everything is not a conspiracy.  And in this case, although the docs are not authentic - the message is.  So cool your old jets.  You can release the caps lock.  Hey - the CIA was wrong about WMA - maybe a lie?  MAYBE A LIE RHF!!!!!  AAAAHAA!!!   SOMEONE IS LYING TO US RHF - ROAST 'EM HIGH!    YOU AND ME DUDE!!!!

Ramadan begins this year on either October 15 or 16. I checked a few sites and come up with the two different dates.

Look for extended broadcast sckeds from countries that celebrate Ramadan.

It's probably a crap semi-auto SKS. They were a dime a dozen before the Clinton ban. Now if it's truely an "assault weapon", meaning full-auto capability he has a mess on his hands....again.

Anyone who thinks Kerry is pro-hunting or pro-gun is uninformed to say the least.

Notice that the content of the documents has been verified.

Killian's secretary herself noted that the contents were factual.

Of course Bush can't deny those facts, either.

I'm fairly certain that overall, there's a lot more explosives out there in the world than 350 tons or 380 tons or how many tons a Canadian 'tard boy wants to spin it.

How many tons of high explosives does Canada have? Perhaps we should make a move to secure it?

I await your answer, 'tard boy.

Heh.  In 1984, my high school class held a mock presidential election.  Bill the Cat and Opus (from Bloom County) got more votes than Mondale did...

Must've been a great school, obviously your so called teachers didn't do a very good job of teaching you who the candidates were, or else you and your classmates simply didn't pay attention.

I'm not surprised, in any case.

You can see folks, that the liberals are just plain damn ass stupid. Always have been, always will be.

But hey, they've always learned how to hold their hand out.

That seems easy enough to learn.

Have these people seen http://www.whoisbush.com ?  It looks like somewhere between 6% and 12% quite sensibly want to vote Rebpulican even though they think this particular war isn't going well.
(Republicans are always better for the military, and really everything else that matters.)

I have also had good luck with the MFJ-1026, unmodified. It works very well on some types of noise, and marginally well on others. What I have found recently is that, if you can identify a source of noise and eliminate it before it comes through the antenna or AC, you're way ahead of the game. For real extrenal noise, like powerline noise coming on the antenna itself and for which an RF choke won't work, the MFJ unit can be a blessing.

It also works well removing offending adjacent channel (or even co-channel) interference. In cities especially, where strong nighttime groundwave signals can overwhelm DX, the MFJ can nearly erase most of them and let the DX come through.

but, as John reminds us, only one source at a time. I have never tried stacking them for multiple noise reduction.

Good luck,
Bruce Jensen

Or they may have felt Bill the Cat and Opus were more credible candidates.

That was the election where the final result in the electoral college was 525-13.

Well, we certainly do need oil, or gas. Try doing without it.

To the best of my knowledge every President in the past 75-100 years has been friendly to the House of Saud.

They certainly have their problems, as well do we.

Well, I can't offer you anything in Mozambique Steve,
But have you got Angola on 7216.8?
It's on air but a difficult catch even here.
WRTH lists it as 100 Kw, but I think it is much less powerful than that.

Already have Angola QSL'd here, Radio Nacional, Dec. 5, 1986, on 4952.

Probably running either 1 or 5 kw.

Yes, it is radio transmitted digitally. Give a listen up on 3995 in our North American evenings and listen to the QRM.

And then try and imagine what that sort of thing will do to the other shortwave broadcasting bands.

This has been stated before many times, but it worth reiterating - The real problem with this election, and the current two-party system in general, is that there is no candidate that gets the best of both philosophies, has some good common-sense material in the center, and eschews all the rubbish that both carry with them - in other words, a fair-and-just-for-all candidate.

We need a candidate whose CIA will zero in on the terrorists with deadly accuracy and who will embrace diversity without (1) letting in every Tom, Dick and Harry unmitigatedly and (2) simultaneously encourage all to work toward the good goals envisioned by the Founders 230 years ago.  We need one who will recognize that it takes both business and the workers working together cooperatively to ensure that everybody gets a fair shake.  We need one that recognizes that a rapidly-growing 10 trillion dollar national debt is going to come back and pile-drive this country into the grave (or at least a vicious civil war) if we don't take some instant steps, and make some significant sacrifices, to bring it back down.  We need a candidate that is going to recognize that you can't have a healthy democracy without healthy people living in a healthy environment, and at the same time realize that for humans or any animal to survive, it takes some use of natural resources, hopefully with wisdom and restraint. We need a candidate, a system, in which compassion for all humans (and in my opinion, living things) is a guiding principle, and in which strenght and power are used to elevate the person that is willing to pitch in and be a good citizen.

Finally, we nede a candidate that is in it for something other than his own and his party's well-being.

Just my opinion, but show me where I am wrong.

Neither one of the candidates seems to bring these qualities to the table.  I am dead certain that Bush does not - he has proven it conclusively and repeatedly and in so many foolish and selfish ways that I have come to expect nothing good from him.  His demagoguery is so bad and so quasi-Fascistic, and worse yet, his inconsistency when he talks about forgiving illegal immigrants with not so much as a quick oath of allegiance, that I cannot see how any red-blooded American can stomach him. I know less about Kerry, but his general demeanor and flow of ideas, which go pretty far left in many cases, do not provide me with much confidence that he can bring stability to this country. It seems that good people these days decide not to become candidates, but instead to let the most pathetic dregs of society become their leaders...and then mostly ignore the garbage they pile on us. Maybe nobody good is left.

We need a sensible, smart, tough, compassionate, wise leader, one who can show real people from all sides that fiscal, physical, national health is a goal worth pursuing and with the ideas to head in that direction. If we're going to be a shining light to the world (and reacquire our own badly misguided way in the dark), we need someone a lot better than the philosophical dwarves who want your vote this time around.

I fear for our nation's future, my child's future. I can survive the second half of my life under most any regime - but our kids deserve the best, and we ain't giving it to them...not this time anyway, not by a country mile.

God bless America - please, we beg You...we haven't needed it this much since 1860. Amen.

Bruce Jensen

Ahem.  Reagan won by something like 85% of the vote.  Bill the Cat/Opus got something like 13%.
Mondale got 2%.

You never had goofballs and the followers of goofballs in your school??  They were the ones who voted for Bill/Opus.

Yes it was.  The percentage of Mondale's cut of the electoral votes was about percentage of votes that he got at our school.

Yep, and in 1860 a Republican candidate won the election. His name was Abraham Lincoln, in case
some of you out there did not receive a good education.

If the Dow Jones industrial average slips more, Kerry should win
October 24, 2004

by John Dorfman

If the Dow Jones industrial average continues its current decline, we may be inaugurating John Kerry as president.

That's a prediction based on data developed by James Stack, a market pundit from Whitefish, Montana. Stack notes that in 24 of the 26 US presidential elections since 1900, the direction of the stock market in the two months preceding the vote accurately predicted the election.

http://finance.yahoo.com/q/ta?t=3m&s=%5EDJI&l=on&z=m&q=l&c=&c=%5EGSPC

Again in the Dow Jones, industrials predicted a victory by the incumbent party. If the Dow fell, the incumbent party lost. The only two exceptions were 1956 (when the Dow dropped 2.8 percent but Dwight D Eisenhower won re-election) and 1968 (when the Dow rose 3.1 percent but Hubert Humphrey and the incumbent Democrats lost to Richard Nixon).

So far, the Dow has a total return of negative 1.9 percent after dividends from September 2 through October 12.

Politics and stocks intersect in two ways. You can buy stocks that may get a short-term or intermediate-term lift from one candidate's victory. Or you can watch stocks in the days leading up to the election to see if the market is giving a hint as to who will win.

If chemical, oil and defence stocks are strong in the rest of October, that will be a sign that Wall Street anticipates a win for President George W Bush. If education and environmental- protection stocks are strong, it may mean that Wall Street is betting on Kerry.

A victory by Kerry would probably be good for environmental stocks (Democrats generally favour more anti-pollution regulations) and for education stocks. Both candidates promise to support education, but I figure Kerry would spend more money on it.

The re-election of Bush would most likely help oil, chemical and defence stocks. Bush spent part of his life in the oil industry. Vice-president Richard Cheney was chief executive of Halliburton. Both have friends in the energy business and are sympathetic to its concerns.

Because Republicans usually favour fewer and more industry- friendly environmental regulations, chemical companies and oil companies would probably have to spend less under Bush to comply with environmental laws.

As for defence spending, I believe both parties support continued increases. (That's why I own a lot of defence stocks.) The pace of increases would probably be more rapid under a Republican administration.

Healthcare stocks are a mixed bag. Drug stocks, I believe, would do better under Bush. A Kerry administration might be more likely to accelerate drug imports from Canada, regulate the healthcare industry and set limits on the prices that government programmes such as Medicare will pay for drugs.

Some other healthcare stocks might do better under Kerry. He might, for example, support more generous Medicare spending on home healthcare.

Bush's tax policies, in my judgment, tend to favour people in the top tax brackets, while Kerry's are geared more to giving middle-income people a tax break. Sellers of luxury goods, therefore, might benefit from Bush's re-election, while lower-end retailers might gain from Kerry's ascent.

Then there's the bond market. Both parties claim to be the party of fiscal responsibility. In fact, it remains to be seen whether either party can balance the budget. I think Kerry has as good a shot at this task as Bush, but the conventional wisdom is that Kerry, as a Democrat, would be a freer spender
The influence of the election on the stock market is limited. Economic and geopolitical issues move stocks. Who occupies the Oval Office is only one part of the picture. - Bloomberg

<good stuff snips>

RHF - is there any reason why this antenna could not be adapted for outdoor use?  Good construction, some simple weatherproofing and mounting on a rotator with plenty of slack coax for turning should give a unit that could stand up fairly well, right?

It's called a "Bubble Jammer."  Do a Google search for it, and you'll see you weren't too far off in your naming it.

"In a bid to get out the vote for John Kerry, Democrat activist groups in Ohio have registered at least two known terrorists involved in a plot to blow up a shopping center.

"Nuradin Abdi, a Somali immigrant and admitted al-Qaida member who was indicted earlier this year as part of a conspiracy to blow up the Columbus Mall, was registered to vote by the left-wing group ACORN, according to the Columbus Dispatch.

"ACORN has spearheaded an aggressive Democrat vote drive in the battleground states.

"Iyman Faris, another new Ohio voter added to the rolls by Democrats, is serving a 20-year jail sentence for his role in surveilling potential al-Qaida targets, including the Brooklyn Bridge, the Dispatch said.

"According to Ohio News Now TV network, Abdi's name was added to the rolls by ACORN employee Kevin Eugene Dooley as part of the group's Project Vote operation. ..."

I'm not familiar with the Samsung A400, but our family has used

Samsung A620 (VGA1000) phones for the past year, and we like them quite well. Before that we used the Samsung 8500, also a nice phone.

Let's see, Kerry has lied about meeting with the UN Security Council... and he has lied about being at a particular baseball game...

His memory sure is suffering...

And Liz Edwards sounds like she's threatening riots...

All interesting, to say the least.

Screw DRM,

If I want to listen to digital radio I'll just buy an XM radio or listen to internet radio.

For me, I like my shortwave analogue since it's an escape from all the digital stuff.

Radio Belarus (that was what they identified as - it used to be Radio Minsk in English)  heard this evening (Sunday, 24 October) in English at 2100-2130 UTC on 7105 and 7280 kHz. Fair to good reception on both frequencies.

It may only be on Sundays at this time. I presume with the time changes effective next weekend, the Sunday broadcast will then move to 2200-2230 UTC.

Ok, yeah, I used to talk with a group on 3985 in the evenings and I always noticed that from about 3995 on up it the band was trashed..

Scotland's most successful radio show makes its comeback for shortwave and web listeners worldwide on November 6th.

Jack McLaughlin's Ceilidh began on floating station 242 Radio Scotland in 1966 as the antithesis of the BBC's rather prim style of presenting traditional Scottish music. The ship borne station came to an end, but the show continued on Scotland's first land based commercial stations Radio Clyde and Radio Forth. And it soon crossed over to television as ITV's phenomenally successful Thingummyjig, leading to hit versions on stage and records.

See long and interesting article by Andy Sennitt at http://medianetwork.blogspot.com/

Aimed now at listeners to shortwave in the USA, Canada, and western Europe, McLaughlin's Ceilidh airs on *radio six international *on Saturday, November 6th at 8.05pm Eastern (Sunday 0105 GMT) on 5105 kHz and on the web at radiosix.com.

Please note: from November 1st, Radio Six's 5105 transmissions will run between 0000 and 0200 UTC to allow for the return to Winter Time in most of our listening area.

That's amazing, I have to tip my hat at your QSLing abilities.
Angola at that time was involved in a raging war with UNITA and the country was in chaos, so I am amazed that you got anyone there to reply to you.

Tell us how you did it, as, believe me, it just didn't happen?
Did you send the QSL in Portuguese? Did you send a reward?
Mostly, if you included a dollar they would pocket it and you would never hear from them.....

"Digital short-wave will revolutionise cross-border broadcasts and will initiate a world-wide renaissance of radio". This was the opinion of the Director General of Deutsche Welle, Mr Erik Bettermann, during a panel discussion at M�nchner Medientage.

Bettermann, the head of the German international broadcaster - and instigator of the event - was not the only one to present an optimistic prediction of a "Digital Global Radio" development: The other panel specialists also emphasised the advantages of digitalisation in the so-called AM range, i.e. short-, medium- and long-wave.

The discussion was chaired by Peter Senger, Director of Distribution at Deutsche Welle and Chairman of the Digital Radio Mondiale (DRM) Consortium; and next to Erik Bettermann, BBC representative Mike Cronk, Dan D'Aversa of RTL Group and Phil Laven of the European Broadcasting Union (EBU) were also participating in the debate.

Senger outlined the advantages of digital short-wave as follows: The world-wide accepted DRM standard provided an excellent audio-quality comparable to FM. In addition, the search for frequencies was obsolete, as the station identification tuned in to the designated frequency and automatically switched to the best one. In parallel, it allows for the sending of accompanying programme information such as text messages.

"On top of everything, digital transmission technology saves a lot of energy and costs compared to the analogue one", Senger said. This would open up enormous opportunities, especially for international broadcasters.

For several years, DW - like many other broadcasters - has noted that listeners migrated from short-wave to FM or other new distribution channels in digital quality, said Bettermann. Deutsche Welle had to stay abreast of these changes. "According to test transmissions being operated by Deutsche Welle, we anticipate large area coverage in almost FM quality without interference such as jitters, induced power-noise or fading", the General Director stated. At the same time, not only stationery indoor reception, but also mobile reception in cars and with small portable devices is possible...(snip).....

Mike Cronk stated that the BBC had invested heavily in DRM and that they were now developing "a detailed strategy for its initial deployment, probably into Europe, in 2005". According to Cronk, DRM offered the unique combination of wide area short-wave coverage and FM usability and quality. As a consequence of using this digital medium, continuous direct delivery to the audience avoiding "political or other regulatory obstacles" will be possible...(snip)....

Does anyone please have datasheet for NEC �PC-1213C or NTE 1615?  Ir is a DIP-8, 2.4 W audio amplifier IC used without any cooling fin in SONY ICF-6500W shortwave portable receiver.  The chip is apparently overloaded since it frequently fails in this radio.  My options are either to buy a replacement at Mouser or to install another IC with more power.  To find an acceptable more powerful IC I need a data sheet for the original one.  The web search failed to locate any data.

Any lead is greatly appreciated.

Yeah its going to be really interesting to watch developments over the next few years. Either it will revolutiionize SW or else it will flop like HDTV did.

I wonder what the implications for SW DXing are - will it be a hobby that fades into hisotyr like listning to a crystal raifo 100 years ago?

Richad, Warsaw

PS nice to you on a postive note Mike! Stay away from UK amateur radio ng

WASHINGTON (Reuters) - The Army Corps of Engineers' top contracting official has demanded an investigation into contracts given to Halliburton, citing improper action that favored Vice President Dick Cheney (news - web sites)'s old company.

According to documents made available to Reuters on Monday by congressional sources, Army Corps whistle-blower Bunny Greenhouse complained of repeated interference in billions of dollars of contracts given to Halliburton unit Kellogg Brown and Root for work in Iraq (news - web sites) and the Balkans.

I bought an older (circa 1970) 121.5 ELT at a auction several years ago.
And this unit had no modulation. Simple oscillator, followed by a trippler,
a driver and a power amp. It had several shock switches in parallel.
This unit was designed to be clamped to the inside frame.
I always wondered just how well it radiate from the inside.

I have heard three ELTs, two hard landings, I live about 6 miles from Lexington BlueGrass airport in Lexington Kentucky, and one was a accidental trip in a local neighborhood. All three had a distinctive "Wail" that is hard to discribe. I keep one scanner tuned to 121.5, 243 and some other hot freqs, and one Saturday morning I heard the wailing of an ELT, and after 30 minutes, decided to go find it. With my wife drivign and me RDFing it took us about 15 minutes.

I used a Pr02004 with an adjustable RF antenuator to find the street. Then used my Pro34, wrapped in aluminium foil to narrow it down. We listened to the CAP for the next 4 hours until they found it. I did call the tower and tried to expalain what I had found, but they thought me a kook.

Maybe the SAR satellite has to accept any signal on 125.5 as valid. I do know that older ELT did not have moudlation. But I would have expected the FAA/FCC to require replacement by of all of the older units by now.

Kerry is a profiteer who's lies about Vietnam killed American GIs. Your traitor boy Kerry is even honored with his picture in a communist museum honoring their war heros. Kerry is one of their war heros for helping them win the war against the US. You must really feel proud of him for being he traitor he is.

I went and dug out a copy of my original report and it was in Portuguese. If I recall correctly I probably sent mint stamps for them to use in reply.

As it was the 5th of December I may have been on a DXpedition over on the east side of the state.

QSL'ing used to be a lot easier.

Billy--I expect this kind of crap reporting from proven biased mouthpieces like Reuters--you know, mentioning Cheney's name when there's no evidence whatsoever that he was involved in anything covered by the story ( "interference" --whatever that is).  However, I'm shocked (shocked!) to see a person of your intelligence  try to make something of it.  Please inform how the piece quoted above is, as you say, "about" Cheney other than the fact that the media wing of the Democratic party feels obliged to mention him anytime they mention Halliburton.

CB,

The 'real' "L" Word is:  L I B E R A L

and John 'ff' Kerry is a Liberal with a Capital "L".

He has a 20 Year Voting Record in the US Senate

a the "Most" Liberal Senator of them All [.]

Apparently the same people who support the terrorist organization known as Kosovo Liberation Army also support Kerry. The KLA are connected with Al Qaeda.
Are there any terrorist groups NOT supporting Kerry?

Yea, then he sent the documents to Burkett down in Texas so he could fax them from Kinkos in Abilene. You really got it all figured out, just like the idiot Pentagon conspiracy. Guess you forgot the connection between the Kerry campaign and Burkett.

DX ACE,

The Liberal Hand-Out is just a Distraction.

Liberals do it to get your attention; all the while using their 'other' Hand to Pick-your-Pocket.

Liberals think 'god' gave them two Hands to Tax and Spend.

The Liberal Code Words Mean: Tax (Lie) and Spend (Steal)

John 'ff' Kerry is a "Big Time" LIBERAL !

I'm really surprised that he didn't say "Joseph Stalin will walk again if we're elected."

It is amazing how these simple minded liberals will yammer on and on get any gas for their SUV they would scream bloody murder.

Oh, by the way, I was born the same year Joseph Stalin died. Some folks tell me that explains certain things. ;-)

2245z 5105 kHz has an incredibly strong signal, American station discussing economics. Has not ID'd in over 15 min of talk. Trying to sell gold, historically about as exciting an investment as tanzanite on the home shopping network, lol.  Anyway, nothing from Scotland could overpower this guy in the US or Canada.

BJ,

It is my understanding that the Coax Cable Lead-in-Line can not be to long.  If as you say, you used good construction techniques and Weather Proofed everything then it should work OK OutSide.

ROTOR:
The "Rotor" should work OK for 'Peaking' and 'Nulling-Out' Signal in the AM/MW Broadcast Band and to some degree in the Shortwave Bands below 5 MHz.  IMHO: Above 5 MHz the Rotor may not do much good.  For 'local' Man-Made-Noise RFI/EMF InDoors or OutSide; usually once you Null-it-Out you need not move or position the Loop Antenna Element again.

PRE-AMPLIFER:
I would think that using a Pre-Amplifier in the Feed-in-Line about 'one diamerter' from the Loop Antenna Element might make the whole thing work a lot better.

FWIW:  I just tried a RadioShack Catalog # 15-1118B TV=-VCR-FM 10dB Signal Amplifier and it gave a 'boost' of about S-5 to S-7 in the AM/MW Band and across the Shortwave Bands.
-  Listenable Signals in the S-1 to S-2 range became S-7 to S-9 and easy to listen to.
-  Very 'weak' (faint) Signals in the No S-Meter reading (S-Zero) became Listenable at S-5 to S-7.

That station is WBCQ, and it would appear that Radio Six International will be using that transmitter for its program.

The above extensive review should peek your interest. Although I haven't owned this type of loop before I am seriously considering it for my noisy RF environs. I only need to figure out how to get it into and between the attic rafters and mount it on a small rotor.

For you, maybe. However this could rejuvenate these bands for mainstream use, instead of them being increasingly relegated to small pockets of niche users, which will eventually see all major broadcasters dumping SW if left unchanged.

I rather doubt that the 'mainstream' will ever gravitate back to shortwave.

Keep dreaming though.

Hmmm - just like IBOC is 'QRM' for FM reception?

SW broadcasting is funded so that listeners can hear programs, not for the benefit of amateur DXers.

DRM lets the intended listeners actually hear those programs clearly, and tune them in easily. It sounds like you don't like it cause it sounds like noise on your (probably highly expensive) set-up, and you like the tuning process to be as difficult as possible.

Yes, without co-ordination there may be interefernce problems during the transmition period, but the sooner the world goes DRM the better international radio broadcastings prospects IMHO.

Rove could do all that, and with documents containing factual information.
That's why Killian's secretary could vouch for the accuracy of the contents.

Here's more on Rove (the bushkultie won't be able to read it, but those who

Oh, that's right, you're a coward who hates yourself and the USA.

Those of us who are real Americans are brave and know that it's our duty to scrutinize and supervise our public officials. We want to know why Bush hasn't taken his physical. We want to know

That's because we belong in the USA and make it what it is.

No two ways about it, DRM = QRM... there is no way around it.

If you want crystal clear fidelity I suggest you get yourself a nice FM set.

All I can say is die DRM, die.

You might be surprised, if they bring out usable sets with combined DAB/DRM that can pluck signals from Band-III, FM, SW, LW, MW based on station titles totally abstracted from frequencies, you might find people listening to SW without them even being aware of it.

Some folks don't necessarily consider it a 'predicament'.

Get yourself a nice FM radio or an XM or Sirius setup.

Be happy, and don't screw up someone else's spectrum.

Perhaps you will tell us how the intended audiences of most shortwave programming will be able to obtain these DRM receivers?  Since most of these broadcasts are intended for audiences outside their own countries, and for other than their own expatriots (e.g. third world or oppressed populations), those audiences are not likely to be able to afford (even if they could obtain) such radios.  Ordinary AM shortwave could be received with nothing more than a few meters of wire, a variable capacitor (and even a fixed one will work, depending upon design), a diode and an earphone. Reception of DRM requires technology that is not available to much of the world.

It's not a matter of me, the broadcasters are perfectly entitled to 'screw up' their own spectrum, be that with an new ITU approved system for example.

The broadcasters, who are the ones' that have to spend money remember, have certainly identified with this 'predicament' over many years. How much fun will your DX efforts be if nobody bothers to broadcast anymore? Granted, there will always be those to draw a sadistic pleasure from eeking out the last signal broadcast the other side of the world.

Unfortunately you can't support a system that is broadcasting to a few hobbyists who are more interested in the medium not the message

One would imagine you'd appreciate something new to DX.

ZEPP,

What you need is the ENTIRE "Un-Edited" Audio Transcript which includes the stuff that CBS, 60 Minutes and Dan Rather did not put on the Air.  (The so called Producer-Director's First-Takes.)
Then you will 'know' the Whole Truth [.]

Marion Carr Knox NEVER Typed Those Fake Documents.

Marion Carr Knox NEVER 'said' she "Typed" any document with those Specific Material Facts for Lt. Col. Killian for and about Lt. GW Bush.

Once Again - Read It Closely again, and Again. and AGAIN !

The Question Remains:
WHY WON'T CBS AND DAN RATHER APOLOGIZE TO THE KILLIAN FAMILY ?

For Fraudulently using Lt. Col. Killian's "Signature" on Forged Documents.

Just you wait and see!  Yessir, it's time to do the Democrat Hokie-Pokie!

You cut your RIGHT foot off....and claim disenfranchisement....

Hey, I think I'm on to something here...gott get my rhyming dictionary...

Noel,

Perhaps your cheese-and-wine-sotted brain missed the obvious sarcasm in my words.

Is English your second language?

Thanks. I see a reference to that at http://www.wbcq.com/index.php

Earlier I had skipped over that link at looked at a reference to Glenn Hauser's Shortwave/DX Report at: http://www.dxing.com/dxr/dxld4126.htm where he mentions:

Verified Jim Cedarstrom's Patriot Trading Group rebroadcast at 6PM on Friday on 5105 // 9330 // 17495.

Don't know if this stuff sounds familiar to you or not.

A journalist who claims that his "massaged version" of an interview is a direct quote has a few things to learn.

quote -
"All electronic equipment creates a frequency called a tempest," he said. "Sometimes these frequencies emit low-level signals that are close to the 121.5 MHz signal."
end quote -

I think you're right. I double checked using an ECG catalog from1998 and it is indeed an 8 pins dip rated at 1.8W, no cooling tab?

It is also discontinued in the 1998 catalog...Oh..Oh...

BRS,

Caught Ed Bolton the other night and he said that the Amos and Andy Programs would stop if . . .
People did not send MONEY !

The "Amos and Andy" Show by Ed Bolton on WBCQ
http://www.zappahead.net/wbcq/main.php?fn=show_program&id=6

Annotated WBCQ Program Guide for Ed Bolton's Amos and Andy Show:

Height is not that important to a small loop. It will pick up more long distance signal and even less local noise the higher up it is placed so like most any antenna higher is better. This antenna will work better close to the ground over most types with the exception of an antennas like a Beverage that is designed to work near ground.

I was on a flight from New Zealand to Australia a few weeks ago and as the plane taxied out onto the runway a cell phone started ringing in the overhead locker above me. There were many disapproving stares from other passengers and crew, until I pointed out that one of the cabin crew had put his bag up there too. Whoops!

Yeah, saw that and you're probably right. There is a chance however that the journo has paraphrased despite what his use of punctuation suggests - I've known it to happen before. I'd like to think that the rescue dude was slightly less simian than the journo, even though I'm not on the same continent I'd just feel better.  :-)

Cheers.

Any antenna will work better outside. The only difference between an outdoor and an indoor is weather proofing and the strength to stand the elements.

The greatest danger to a complacent society is its acceptance of roguery, deception, thieving, and extreme violence, even when there's overwhelming evidence of it.

Wonder how that would have turned out in California.

Sunday at the coffee shop I frequent I got to see a goof ball wearing a Bush mask asking people to vote for him. The little kids with their parents would say no way since Bush was bad. Wonder where they got their programming from home or school.

Of course none of them would know about Kerry's war atrocities or the treason he committed or the lack of leadership or accomplishment he displayed in over two decades in the Senate or his flip flopping on matters on national security or the outright lying during his campaign.

Well, you are just as stunningly incompetent because they have been

You must be joking, Jeffrey. Either that, or you know nothing of Karl Rove.

Ask someone about the incident in 1986, in which he bugged his own office and blamed it on the Democrats. And that was just his first major stunt...

I have a bad feeling that there may be riots no matter who wins. The country is very polarized thanks to Mr. Vietnam war protester being the anti-Bush instead of promoting a positive agenda.

This is DRM propaganda.

Actually if the receiver has a TSO, it can be used in flight. (A TSO or Technical Service Order  means it has been specifically blessed by the US FAA, and is designed for and approved for aircraft use) An FAA

TSO is accepted without further discussion in many countries, including Australia.

A few years ago I was actually carring  a aircraft GPS on an airliner, and asked if I could turn it on. When the Captain discovered it was a aviation  TSO'd unit, I got an invite to the flight deck, and the unit made most of the trip as an additional navigation device in the cockpit.

Heck, the guy is such a slob who would notice if he got hit with a pie.

| Baloney.

Precisely. The simple fact is, the slick salesmen haven't found a way to get around the laws of physics, quite yet. They have, however, found a great new "income channel," an income channel which allows the "account executives" to "maximize ROI," or some such. But, in one word (baloney), you managed to capture the bottom line.

Anyone heard Radio Huaya lately? (Wasn't it on 2390 kHz?)

-------------

"For roughly three decades, Radio Huayacocotla (pronounced hway-ah-koh-KOHT-lah), a 500-watt short-wave community radio station deep in the heart of rural Veracruz state in east-central Mexico has served as an audio lifeline for some of this country's poorest and most overlooked people. Broadcasting eight hours a day, six days a week, in a region where the illiteracy is high and the technology low, the station is many people's main news outlet. And as the only licensed radio station operated primarily by and for indigenous Mexicans, it's a unique source of two other commodities that some deem crucial to this community's long-term survival: regular contact with distant loved ones, and the freewheeling, improvisational music called son huasteco."

: So, why doesn't the government also require newspapers to have a balance of
: voices and opinions?

Is this a rhetorical question or what? That's the first thing taught in Mass Media 101. There is a limited amount of spectrum space available for utilization. That's one of the reasons why the FCC was (supposedly) created (I remember when the FCC was NOT a lap dog for the broadcasters).
To manage a natural resource which supposedly belongs to the people (although that is now empty rhetoric). The same conditions hardly apply to the printed media.

: What are the details of this rewrite? The old fairness doctrine was a club

: for partisians and others with an ax to grind.  How would the new fairness
: doctrine keep the political partisans and kooks from harassing media
: stations with nusiance complaints?  Who would define what a nuisance : complaint is?

so what do we have now? Rushbo "Oxy" Limpballs 24/7

: Should this new fairness doctrine cover internet radio, satellite radio,
: satellite TV, and cable TV?

: Yeah, people listen to what they want to listen to.  I have no idea if the : IQ factor is up or down.  I am sure people would be stupid to be listening : to things they don't want to listen to.

The people listen to what the corporate Crud Channel goons (and their ilk) shovel out of the broadcast latrine.

: I am also sure there has never been as much bad radio as there is now.
: There has never been as much radio as there is now.    There are more : stations broadcasting more hours than ever before.  Too bad.  As a radio
: hobbyist, I miss the days of easy coast to coast dx'ing.

The FCC responded to what the broadcasters wanted and now both AM & FM have been technically ghettoized.

: I dislike most of the stuff on the radio.  So what?  There's still plenty to : listen to.  Nobody makes me listen to Limbaigh, and I don't.  I can't stand
: Sport Babble but I don't have to.  Mostly I listen to a local FM Jazz : station and US domestic shortwave radio.  For me, radio has never been more : entertaining.  There are also some local Spanish and Polish language AM
: stations here with good music.  Very little of this was around 30 years ago.

Yup. There's sure al ot of cariety. A "classic rock" and "hot hits" and "modern country" station in every town. All voice tracked with the same 20 minute spot load anmd 200 song playlist. And news? What is that? Where did it go?

: When was there more radio diversity?  When there were three of four radio : networks, each playing their own similar so-so comedies or dramas?  When : each of  the top 40 stations in the US were playing "Muskrat Love"?  The : radio industry is like the rest of the entertainment industry.  As soon as : somebody comes up with an idea which grabs a part of the audience, that idea
: gets reused over and over in each market.

See above. You are equating quantity with diversity. I laugh at the way
"top 40" has been fractionalized into "classic rock ("B" side losers)," "hits of the 60s & 70s," "alternative," and the latest insanity, "old school, "  ad nauseum. Give me a break!  That is hardly diversity.

Diversity and creative died about 15 years ago. About the time the big push for deregulation began.

: If that's true, then the problem will fix itself.  These overpriced radio : stations will soon go for giveaway prices.  You'll buy a radio station and
: so will I.  I will realize that your programming ideas are so good, I'll : copy them all!!

That's the whole point! YOU can't buy a radio station and neither can I.
Radio stations have become so overpriced thanks to the accumulation of corporate control that few single ownership outlets remain. I love having all my programming delivered voice tracked from some studio 1500 miles away. The problem is solving itself: radio is dying.

That shouldn't be all that shocking. If it was a "wire" it could have been for almost anything. Remember he is a "Sitting President" with all of the crazy security that goes with the job. It could have been something to do with that. You didn't see any overt signs of security while watching the debates on TV, but I'll bet you there was plenty you didn't see.

George W. Bush has come to embody a politics that is antithetical to almost any kind of thoughtful conservatism.

Hummm... It should have worked just fine. Besides being lousy to solder to, there is nothing wrong with a foil shield. Thats solid coverage, and better than strands of wire. The coax shield for a SW or MW loop should be fairly non critical.  The only purpose is to ensure balance. MK

I loved Readers Digest as a child, and I loved WLS.  What ever happened to Larry Lujack from the 60s?  He was the wild child DJ that pushed the limits of the FCC's patience, and was fired and rehired a few times.  I know this is off topic, but I just had to ask.  Inquiring minds blah, blah, blah.

"The Results were very poor" is not very much information to go on to any conclusion or solution.

Maybe he was expecting more output from the loop than he got. A shielded loop that is not very large is not going to have a big output. Maybe he screwed up and did not have a shield gap.

Him and Cheney are the worst criminals this country has ever seen. They have robbed the poor and middle class and rewarded the rich while killing our young on WMD's that never, ever existed.

He's a liar, and shows "dry drunk" characteristics.

You know ex-ACTLY what I'm talking about because you're one of THEM. For years the mighty Liberty Net on 3950 has been the only thing that has kept us from being overrun by Jewish Bankers taking our jobs at Wal-Mart, Trilateralists forcing kids to have abortions EVEN IF THEY'RE NOT PREGNANT, and other One-Worlders. And you can't stand that, can you?

Sure you - I mean "they" - call themselves One-Worlders, but do they ever say WHICH WORLD? I'm not going to be SOULED to the Space Bankers, my friend. Give me liberty or give me Slack. Or Kill Me(TM). Pick up on it before it's too late.

Not to mention the UN-hired Heliopters(TM) in infrasonic Whisper Mode seeding the skies with "Chem Trail Helper," the Clintons, the coverup behind the FACT that the FCC's Riley Hollingsworth CASTS NO SHADOW and HAS NO PULSE, and so many more TRUTHZ that you want to suppress.

What in the name of the blood-'n'-pus-soaked sock of Kurt Schilling are trying to do? Ruin America? (show all work)

Did you know DRM also has a "dual channel" mode too!
You can actually use to to put twice as much "predicament" in the same spectrum too!

Hey! Twice as much religious channels for the same money! Yes!!!

> Get yourself a nice FM radio or an XM or Sirius setup.

FM is limited to local coverage and XM and Sirius is limited to the US
(and as a economic model only usuageable is a limited number of countries).

What makes you think it is "your" spectrum anyway?

My main fear with DRM is that, if it proves to become popular for local stations in the 11 m broadcasting-band (25.67-26.10), the radio-amateurs will better stand guard for their 10 meter ham-band (28.0-29.7).

Don't worry, you won't be able to hear the terroristic broadcasts over the interference of BPL.  Once again, freedom will be kept safe for another day.

I bought the ICE 180A and it seems to work very well down through the AM/MW Broadcast Band (500 kHz) although it's listed Coverage is 1.5 MHz to 30 MHz.  The ICE 182A  Beverage Matching (Isolation)
Unit has a listed Coverage of 100 kHz to 30 MHz.

I seem to recall something along those lines in the past about that stuff possibly already having been moved to Syria or other such places before we even got there.

Try looking for tempest and crypto if you want to find out more.

Anyway, from the Introduction referenced at:
http://www.usace.army.mil/inet/usace-docs/eng-pamphlets/ep1110-3-2/toc.htm

"TEMPEST is the unclassified name for the studies and investigation of compromising emanations.
Equipment within the facility can be the source of electromagnetic waves and stray currents/voltages with characteristics which are related to the information content of signals being processed.
If these unintentional emissions are intercepted and studied, the analyst can reconstruct the original data and could gain access to national security information.
A proper TEMPEST design, however, will preclude the presence of analyzable signals in uncontrolled areas."

There was/is a ng called amateur radio uk or something like that. I used to subscirbe. But it degenerated because of a few nasty people and became a nasty group full of hate and insults.

Recently I have noticed a lot of the "criminals" of that group have started to appear on this group. I will not name them, but BE WARNED they like to provoke.

Look out for provkoing posters with UK addresses. If you feel they are getting insutling add them to your blcoked senders list (kill file)

Believe me, this group is in danger of going the way the UK amateur radio group did.

At any rate, you can bet that Kerry will jump on this faster than he can chase a rich widow.

I do like this little quote from the Drudge story:

A senior Bush official e-mailed DRUDGE late Monday: "Let me get this straight, are Mr. Kerry and Mr. Edwards now saying we did not go into Iraq soon enough? We should have invaded and liberated Iraq sooner?"

If it takes off, wouldn't it open up new DXing possibilities? At least for those who are interested in new challenges.

With careful signal averaging or processing, it may (for example) be possible to pull a station ID out of the DRM stream in reception conditions where even the existence of a station would be doubtful now.

However, the worries about DRM availability in oppressive regimes etc are quite justified. Yet, if it means a traveller can receive BBC World Service etc without hassle across the globe, it's worth having. At least for travellers who don't take laptops with them, and/or go to places without internet connections.

Cheers,
David.

The power required for efficient DRM transmission kind of precludes it from being 'DX'... And if you think that governments who can barely keep an ordinary station on shortwave are suddenly going to embrace DRM and toss a lot of money into it you are sadly mistaken.

Also, it would seem that shortwave is used a lot these days to broadcast information to third world countries and the folks in those areas probably don't have a lot of funds to put into the purchase of new receiving sets.

It really seems to me that DRM is being embraced by a certain 'clique' in Europe, and for the life of me I can't really understand why.

 HONG KONG. A reminder that the HK to Nha Trang, Vietnam yacht race is about to start, and per 4-162 the first weather broadcast on 8749 USB will be 1033 UT
           Tuesday October 26; there will also be a morning broadcast at 0033; the race runs thru October 30, but I am not sure exactly when the last 8749 transmission will be. Lots and lots of info about the race, including some about radio communications on other frequencies via

That's probably true now of Western Europe and the US, but not everyone lives in Western Europe or the US.

NBC reports that its embedded reporters noticed that the explosives were missing AS AMERICAN TROOPS FIRST ENTERED IRAQ.  This happened about 19 months ago.

The public statements by Kerry show that he is either (1) ignorant of the facts and rushes to judgement, or (2) is desperate, or (3) both.

And Kerry claims to be a potential president?  BLEH!!!!

I haven't listened to them in quite some time (Do have them QSL'd though from back in 1987) but they are/were apparently still on the air at least as late as June according to:

Of course you can ... an AM station that probably can't make money.

Two recent big-city AM sales:
WBIX (Boston suburb) 40 kW day, 2.5 kW night, to an INDIVIDUAL for $7 million.
WPLC (Washington suburb) 1 kW day, 48 watts night, to Bonneville for $4 million. But an astute friend suspects that Bonneville could diplex it on their WTOP towers and get more day power and possibly "real" night operation.  And just think, with 450 kHz spacing everybody driving past a joint-site WTOP/WPLC would hear them no matter where their AM radio was tuned.

Like GE and Matt Drudge are credible authorities?  LMAO!!!!

That's 20 tractor trailers full of bulk cargo.  We had the area under observation with satellites and drones.  There's no way that stuff was moved anytime in 2003 without the US knowing about it.

Matt Drudge is a raging flamer, BTW.

Thanks for posting this, though it'll force the bushkultie to cram his

So why have so many countries been defunding international broadcasting? Could it be they think international broadcasting is a waste of money? Why would clearer signals make it less of a waste? If the programming is worth hearing, the listener will put up with occasional distortion and fading.

International broadcating is boring, and bored listeners are tuning out. DRM won't fix that. The internet is a much better source for news. End time preachers and conspiranoics are much more fun to listen to.

Getting the international broadcasters off the air would be the best thing possible for the SW hobby.

There isn't much usable bandwith on SW, at least as compared with VHF and UHF, and SW propagation is inconsistant and not fully predictable.  Most of the SW utility transmissions have moved to satellites.  It's not 1950 anymore, and the SW bands don't have nearly the economic importance they had then.

But, while SW's quirks make it unattactive for 100% reliable communication, those quirks make SW a playground for the radio hobbyist.  Radio amateurs have been playing with SW for decades, and there has been a boom in pirate radio in the last ten years or so.  As soon as governments lose interest in SW, the amateurs and pirates will have SW all to themselves.

Of course, governments can't be entirely disinterested in SW.  There is a need for military and emergency communications on SW.  And out of band interference must be controlled.  But I'm convinced hobby broadcasting will flourish long after the last international broadcaster turns off the switch.

From Publishers Weekly
Weekly Standard reporter Hayes marshals a wealth of evidence that, in contrast with the tenuous connections that have so far made news, point to ties between Saddam Hussein's regime and al-Qaeda. Most intriguingly, Hayes finds links between Iraq and the 1993 World Trade Center bombers, one of whom apparently received shelter and financial support from Iraq after the attack. Hayes also gets confirmation by Czech officials of the alleged Prague meeting between September 11 hijacker Mohammed Atta and an Iraqi intelligence agent. Elsewhere, Hayes points to Iraqi intelligence documents that mention a "good relationship" with bin Laden. Other sources note an alleged agreement for Iraq to assist al-Qaeda in making chemical and biological weapons. Relying both on "open sources" like news articles, transcripts from the 1998 embassy bombing trials, as well as anonymous intelligence reports and informants, Hayes allows that some of these stories may prove unreliable. But he contends that the number, consistency and varied provenance of reports of high-level contacts between al-Qaeda and Iraq throughout the past decade allows one to "connect the dots" into a clear pattern of collaboration. Despite the frustrating absence of source notes and no knowledge of what cooperative efforts ever came of these contacts, most readers will conclude from this volume that the Saddam-al-Queda thread has some play left in it.

Oops!

Turns out that, according to reporter Jim Miklaszewski, the IAEA's release of this "news item" was "highly political."

So, once again, we have the wacky Left floating more trumped - up propaganda that has nothing to do with reality, as "proof" that "George Bush is destroying America."

Typical.

Believe
Why I believe in our president
by Thomas F. Schaller, Executive Editor
10.26.04

I believe in President George W. Bush. I've always believed him.

I believe the president invaded Iraq to secure liberty and democracy for the Iraqi people. I believe he had compelling evidence that Iraq was a significant threat to America and the world, and presented that evidence in a complete and balanced manner. Like 42 percent of Americans - and 62 percent of Republicans - I believe Saddam Hussein was involved in the September 11 attacks.

I believe we have enough troops on the ground in Iraq to ensure stability. I believe the rising American fatality rates, the rising casualty rates, and the rising American share of those coalition fatalities and casualties testify to the undeniable progress we're making there. I believe it is inappropriate and traitorous, however, for the media to broadcast pictures of American flag-draped caskets returning from Iraq.

I believed then-candidate Bush when he said during the 2000 campaign that America should not nation-build, and believe him now when he says our nation was divinely chosen for this task. I believe, as the president claims, that "free societies are peaceful societies," but that the political and civil rights in oppressive, undemocratic countries like Saudi Arabia and Pakistan are exempt from this standard. I believe Iraqis view Americans as liberators, and that once this swift, cheap war concludes the world will be more stable, our allies more cooperative, and our enemies fewer and less threatening.

I believe the best response against an Islamic fundamentalist network operating from a South Asian cave which used boxcutters to attack us is to invade a secular Arab dictator living in 11 palaces in a Middle Eastern country whose (supposed) weapon of choice was nuclear, chemical and biological weapons. I further believe that the best way to accomplish that mission was to land on air aircraft carrier in military garb and stand in front of a banner declaring it so.

I believe the president when he says he would have moved "heaven and earth" had he any "inkling" that terrorists were planning to attack America with hijacked airplanes. I believe the security briefing the president read five weeks before the attacks - which was entitled "Bin Laden Determined to Strike Inside United States," and specifically mentioned hijacked airplanes and New York City as a target - was an inkling-free, "historical" document. I believe we should re-double our investments in a missile defense system, which could have prevented the 9/11 attacks and will prevent future attacks like it from occurring.

I believe the president was right to oppose the formation of the 9/11 Commission, to change his mind but then oppose fully funding it, to change his mind but then oppose granting its request for an extension, to change his mind but refuse to testify for more than an hour, to change his mind but then testify alongside Vice President Dick Cheney so long as transcripts and note-taking were prohibited. I believe the investigation into the Abu Ghraib prison scandal shows it was the fault of a handful of misguided underlings who simply misunderstood a memo signed by the Secretary of Defense which authorized the use of dogs to interrogate prisoners.

Domestically, I believe income tax cuts for the wealthiest Americans are the solution to budget surpluses or deficits, high or low inflation, stable or unstable interest rates, expanding or shrinking trade deficits, widening or narrowing wealth gaps, increasing or decreasing poverty rates, rising or falling unemployment, prosperity or recession, wartime or peace. I believe record-setting budget deficits, record-setting trade deficits, and a burgeoning national debt are examples of the president's fiscally-conservative economic leadership.

I believe that a president who insists that hard-working Americans deserve tax breaks should continue to stand fast against cutting payroll taxes - the direct tax on hard work. Clearly, I do not believe that payroll taxes coupled with income taxes on work constitute "double taxation," but the dividend tax on assets does. I believe those who complain that one third of American children live in poverty, or that the wealthiest nation on the planet should feel sheepish about having 45 million uninsured citizens, deserve California Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger's ridicule as "economic girlie men."

I believe the best way to improve local-run schools is to spend billions of dollars on a massive, federal testing program to tell us our schools are failing. I do not believe, however, that requiring local school districts to meet new, federal standards without resources is an example of an "unfunded mandate." I believe the president's education initiative will leave no child behind, much as his "clear skies" and "healthy forests" initiatives will make skies clearer and forests healthier.

Finally, I believe a white man of privilege who was accepted to Yale University despite a middling performance in prep school; was accepted to Harvard Business School despite a middling performance at Yale; was admitted to the Texas Air National Guard despite no flight background and an entrance exam score in the bottom quartile; was given funds by Osama bin Laden's father to start a failed oil company; and was chosen to serve as Texas governor and 43rd President of the United States despite a lifelong record of mediocrity, is a man with the moral authority to criticize affirmative action as a policy that gives opportunities to the undeserving.

Make no mistake: I believe that President Bush, just as he promised he would, has restored honor and integrity to the White House and united us as Americans.

Veteran BBC broadcaster John Peel has died at the age of 65, while on holiday in Peru.

(I was just listening to him last week, he sounded as fresh and vital as ever. I'm sure some sour listeners will be happy, apparently the BBC WS received more negative mail about his show than any other, a fact that never failed to make John smile. R.I.P.)

The CIA rejects links between Hussein and the WTC attacks.

It does NOT however dispute links between Cheney and Saddam, links between Rumsfeld and Saddam, links between Bush and bin Laden.

600 people were murdered in Atlanta, GA last yr. We will never stop killing, robbery, etc... If we think we can stop it that is just an illusion. Could not stop it in Jesus' time and we will not stop it now or ever. We can stay in the wars overseas forever and it will not change a thing. Someone else will pop up over time....and it will start again...

Wow! Great catch!! Mik quotes an unnamed administration official. That wouldn't be "highly politicized," would it, since the administration never lies, not even the ones who refuse to go on record. And of course Matt Drudge doesn't lean one way or the other does he?

Of course, Jim Miklaszewski also reports this "highly politicized" "news item" where the White House didn't want to take out a master terrorist because it interfered with their war plans (d'oh!! Bring 'Em On!!):

Avoiding attacking suspected terrorist mastermind
Abu Musab Zarqawi blamed for more than 700 killings in Iraq

By Jim Miklaszewski Correspondent
NBC News
Updated: 7:14 p.m. ET March 2, 2004

With Tuesday's attacks, Abu Musab Zarqawi, a Jordanian militant with ties to al-Qaida, is now blamed for more than 700 terrorist killings in Iraq.

But NBC News has learned that long before the war the Bush administration had several chances to wipe out his terrorist operation and perhaps kill Zarqawi himself - but never pulled the trigger.

In June 2002, U.S. officials say intelligence had revealed that Zarqawi and members of al-Qaida had set up a weapons lab at Kirma, in northern Iraq, producing deadly ricin and cyanide.

The Pentagon quickly drafted plans to attack the camp with cruise missiles and airstrikes and sent it to the White House, where, according to U.S. government sources, the plan was debated to death in the National Security Council.

"Here we had targets, we had opportunities, we had a country willing to support casualties, or risk casualties after 9/11 and we still didn't do it," said Michael O'Hanlon, military analyst with the Brookings Institution.

Four months later, intelligence showed Zarqawi was planning to use ricin in terrorist attacks in Europe.

The Pentagon drew up a second strike plan, and the White House again killed it.  By then the administration had set its course for war with Iraq.

"People were more obsessed with developing the coalition to overthrow Saddam than to execute the president's policy of preemption against terrorists," according to terrorism expert and former National Security Council member Roger Cressey.

In January 2003, the threat turned real. Police in London arrested six terror suspects and discovered a ricin lab connected to the camp in Iraq.

The Pentagon drew up still another attack plan, and for the third time, the National Security Council killed it.

Military officials insist their case for attacking Zarqawi's operation was airtight, but the administration feared destroying the terrorist camp in Iraq could undercut its case for war against Saddam.

The United States did attack the camp at Kirma at the beginning of the war, but it was too late - Zarqawi and many of his followers were gone.  "Here's a case where they waited, they waited too long and now we're suffering as a result inside Iraq," Cressey added.

And despite the Bush administration's tough talk about hitting the terrorists before they strike, Zarqawi's killing streak continues today.

Kerry leans so far he's about to fall over.

Come to think of it, he has fallen over several times, and he always seems to blame someone else.

Curiously, Drudge's mysterious NBC news report has yet to materialize. The only story on the MSNBC site (home of NBC News) quotes the Pentagon official as saying that yup, we lost 'em, it's our fault.

"Timing of theft of Iraq explosives remains a mystery"

And Drudge knows for a fact that NBC imbeds led around by the nose by the military in secure compounds know exactly what they were looking for, right? Lemme guess, the same anonymous unnamed Iraqi that Judith Miller was allowed to see in head cover at a distance of 150 yards is their source on this?

Increase in War Funding Sought

Bush to Request $70 Billion More

By Jonathan Weisman and Thomas E. Ricks
Washington Post Staff Writers
Tuesday, October 26, 2004; Page A01

The Bush administration intends to seek about $70 billion in emergency funding for the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan early next year, pushing total war costs close to $225 billion since the invasion of Iraq early last year, Pentagon and congressional officials said yesterday.

White House budget office spokesman Chad Kolton emphasized that final decisions on the supplemental spending request will not be made until shortly before the request is sent to Congress. That may not happen until early February, when President Bush submits his budget for fiscal 2006, assuming he wins reelection.

But Pentagon and House Appropriations Committee aides said the Defense Department and military services are scrambling to get their final requests to the White House Office of Management and Budget by mid-November, shortly after the election. The new numbers underscore that the war is going to be far more costly and intense, and last longer, than the administration first suggested.

The Army is expected to request at least an additional $30 billion for combat activity in Iraq, with $6 billion more needed to begin refurbishing equipment that has been worn down or destroyed by unexpectedly intense combat, another Appropriations Committee aide said. The deferral of needed repairs over the past year has added to maintenance costs, which can no longer be delayed, a senior Pentagon official said.

The Army is expected to ask for as much as $10 billion more for its conversion to a swifter expeditionary force. The Marines will come in with a separate request, as will the Defense Logistics Agency and other components of the Department of Defense. The State Department will need considerably more money to finance construction and operations at the sprawling embassy complex in Baghdad. The Central Intelligence Agency's request would come on top of those.

"I don't have a number, and [administration officials] have not been forthcoming, but we expect it will be pretty large," said James Dyer, Republican chief of staff of the Appropriations Committee.

Bush has said for months that he would make an additional request for the war next year, but the new estimates are the first glimpse of its magnitude. A $70 billion request would be considerably larger than lawmakers had anticipated earlier this year. After the president unexpectedly submitted an $87 billion request for the Iraq and Afghanistan efforts last year, many Republicans angrily expressed sticker shock and implored the administration not to surprise them again.

This request would come on top of $25 billion in war spending allocated by Congress for the fiscal year that began Oct. 1. The two bills combined suggest the cost of combat is escalating from the $65 billion spent by the military in 2004 and the $62.4 billion allocated in 2003, as U.S. troops face insurgencies that have proven far more lethal than expected at this point.

"We're still evaluating what our commitments will be, and we will submit a request that fully supports those commitments," Kolton said.

The senior Pentagon official, speaking on the condition of anonymity, said final figures may be shaped by the outcome of the presidential election and events in Iraq. But assuming force levels will remain constant in Iraq at about 130,000 troops, the final bill will be "roughly" $70 billion for the military alone, he said.

In making cost estimates for the supplemental budget request, Pentagon officials have distanced themselves from the Bush administration's public optimism about trends in Iraq. Instead, they make the fairly pessimistic assumption that about as many troops will be needed there next year as are currently on the ground.

The latest request comes on top of three earlier emergency spending bills approved by Congress in support of the war. In August, Congress approved $25 billion for the war as a bridge to the larger request the president promised for early 2005. Last October, lawmakers passed an $87.5 billion emergency spending measure that included $65 billion for combat operations in Iraq and Afghanistan. An additional $18.6 billion of that money went to Iraqi reconstruction.

Congress approved the first war spending measure in April 2003, a $78.5 billion measure that included $62.4 billion for combat and $7.5 billion for foreign assistance.

The White House has been careful to keep the war spending numbers "close to the vest," Dyer said. But Pentagon officials have been working on the request for two to three months, even as they put together their far larger budget request for fiscal 2006, the Pentagon official said.

The Iraq war has proven so costly because of the unexpectedly intense opposition from insurgents. That has led the Pentagon to keep far more troops in Iraq than it planned.

At the end of the invasion of Iraq in the spring of 2003, Pentagon officials expected to be able to radically trim the occupation force by the end of that year to perhaps 50,000 troops or less. Instead, they maintained a force of about 130,000 personnel there and have supplemented that force with about 20,000 civilian contractors.

On top of paying the wages of the all-volunteer force and the contractors, the military has paid for building dozens of bases and keeping a high-tech force equipped with computers, communications gear and expensive modern weaponry.

Yale University economist William D. Nordhaus estimated that in inflation-adjusted terms, World War I cost just under $200 billion for the United States. The Vietnam War cost about $500 billion from 1964 to 1972, Nordhaus said. The cost of the Iraq war could reach nearly half that number by next fall, 2 1/2 years after it began.

A Pentagon spokeswoman declined to comment. "We are going to let OMB talk for the administration on this issue," Marine Lt. Col. Rose-Ann Lynch said.

Why is it that you are so long on sloganeering and so short on actual information?
If you think Bush & Cheney are traitors to the Revolution (whatever the f- that means), do actually expect liberal Democrats to -ever- be for -smaller- government?  Cuz if you do, you're more deluded than it already appears.

Gov. Won't Commit to Stump for Bush

He is considering a single trip to Ohio - there and back the same day, probably Friday.

"Now I can squeeze in a quick trip because I have my own plane," he said. "So there is a way of doing it. But I'm not going to hop around from state to state because the people did not elect me to do that."

Schwarzenegger said he could not justify long campaign trips out of state for Bush.

"I was sent by the people of California to Sacramento to represent them," he said. "This is my job - to work for California and not go out on the campaign trial. And this is why I will stay here in California."

Air America?  It would be appropriate to go from one literally

Well, heck, if no more funding were asked for, then you stupid Canadian 'tards would say we were denying our troops the necessary materiel to prosecute the war.

And then you'd bitch about that.

No...

Starting Monday, Salem Communications is expected to debut a news/talk lineup featuring Bill Bennett from 5 to 8 a.m., Laura Ingraham from 8 to 11 a.m., Dennis Prager from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m., Michael Medved from 2 to 5 p.m., Michael Savage from 5 to 8 p.m., Hugh Hewitt from 8 to 11 p.m., Mike Gallagher from 11 p.m. to 2 a.m., and Ernie Brown from 2 to 5 a.m.

Brian Kovacs, production manager at Salem's Christian ministry WYLL-AM (1160), moves up to program manager of WIND. Salem swapped its contemporary Christian WZFS-FM (106.7) -- "The Fish" -- in a multicity deal with Univision Radio for WIND.

The only change in the lineup could come if Salem succeeds in luring Don Wade and Roma from WLS-AM (890). But such a move is a long shot at best.

Whether Don & Roma renew as morning hosts at WLS, their Disney/ABC outlet stands the most to lose in the ratings when WIND returns to news/talk. Conservative talk fans will now have a clear alternative to WLS.

Of course, the Bush campaign is now countering a Kerry New York Times-based attack with an NBC News-based response.

The campaigns today surely will continue their fight over the 380 tons of explosives missing in Baghdad, as reported yesterday in the Times. The Bush campaign is trying to make the case that, per an NBC News report last night, the explosives went missing before US troops got there, and thus Kerry's attack is false. NBC's Jim Miklaszewski reported last night that US troops entered the Al QaQaa compound three weeks into the war and never found the explosives. Miklaszewski also noted that in a letter this month, the Iraqi interim government told the International Atomic Energy Agency that the explosives were lost to looting due to a lack of security. The Kerry campaign argues that the Bush folks are taking NBC's reporting out of context and questions how hard US troops looked for the stockpiles.

Gee, I always thought they've been looking for stockpiles of whatever ever since they've been there.

That's why everyone is saying no WMD's have been found yet.

I guess the excuse could now be used about the missing WMD's is that "Hey, we've just never looked for 'em."

Maybe that will be Kerry's new campaign tactic.... "We know Iraq has WMD's, the Bush administration just hasn't looked for them."

Really LAMO.

Since your so concerned with "atrocities," I'm wondering where your posts are condemning car bombings in Iraq and Israel....or condemning Saddam, who killed hundreds of thousands in brutal ways....  Are you getting the picture as to how inconsistent your indignation is and why it's hard to take you seriously?  I suppose not.

As part of the test transmissions from World Music Radio (WMR) on 5815 kHz we'll be airing extracts from various radio stations from the eastern Caribbean (recordings were made a few months ago) + a special programme featuring music from the Caribbean and from the Andes:

Tuesday October 26th 2004:
1800 UTC: The Vibe City 105, Trinidad & Tobago (105.5 MHz) - 1800-1900 UTC: The Best Mix 95.1, Trinidad & Tobago (95.1 MHz) - 1900-2000 UTC: Yes FM, Trinidad & Tobago (98.9 MHz)

Wednesday October 27th 2004:
1700-1800 UTC: Radio Tambrin, Tobago, Trinidad & Tobago (92.1 MHz) - 1800-1900 UTC: WEFM, Trinidad & Tobago (96.1 MHz) - 1900-2000 UTC: Ebony 104, Trinidad & Tobago (104.1 MHz)

Thursday October 28th 2004:
1700-1800 UTC: City Sounds, Grenada (97.5 MHz) - 1800-1900 UTC: Caribbean music -
1900-2000 UTC: Andean music

WMR is broadcasting on 5815 kHz with a power of 5 kW from Jutland, Denmark, and reception is currently fairly good over most parts of Europe.

U.S. Consumer Confidence Fell to a Seven-Month Low (Update2)  Listen
Oct. 26 (Bloomberg) -- U.S. consumer confidence fell for a third straight month in October, suggesting growing voter discontent with the economy a week before President George W. Bush seeks re-election.

The Conference Board's consumer confidence index dropped to 92.8, the lowest since March, from a revised 96.7 in September, down from the previous estimate. Americans' assessments of the current economy and their outlook for the next six months fell.

The survey is the Conference Board's last before the U.S. presidential election on Nov. 2. Since the index began in 1967, every incumbent president has lost his re-election bid when the consumer confidence index was below 99 on Election Day.

``It's not good news for Bush. He can still win, but this is not a good omen,'' said Delos Smith, a Conference Board economist. ``People are nervous about their jobs and incomes.''

The median forecast of 65 economists surveyed by Bloomberg News was for confidence to fall to 94 from an initial estimate of 96.8. Forecasts ranged from 85.5 to 97. The Conference Board, a New York-based research group, surveys 5,000 households on general economic conditions, people's employment prospects, and spending plans.

The confidence index is below the 115.7 reading when Bush took office in January 2001. Slowing job growth and rising oil prices in recent months have pushed confidence lower since the measure reached a two-year high of 105.7 in July.

Jobs and Energy

The economy added an average of 103,000 jobs a month since June after gaining 204,000 a month in the first half. Crude oil prices, which rose to an intra-day record $55.67 yesterday, are up 80 percent over the past year, pushing gasoline and heating oil costs higher. That threatens to erode consumer spending and prompt companies to be more cautious about hiring.

``High energy and lower consumer confidence will lower the rate of growth,'' Lew Frankfort, chief executive of Coach, Inc., the largest U.S. seller of luxury leather goods, said in an interview.

The component of the Conference Board index tracking assessments of current economic conditions fell to 94.2 from 95.3 in September.

While the percentage of Americans that saw jobs as hard to get now fell to 27.8 from 28 percent, the percentage seeing business conditions as ``bad'' rose to 21.4 from 20.4.

A gauge of optimism about the economic outlook over the next six months plunged to 92 this month from 97.7 in September. Consumers said the job market and their own income prospects would worsen.

Employment Outlook

The percentage that said there would be more jobs available six months from now fell to 16.5 from 17.8 in September, while 18.4 percent said their incomes would increase, down from 20 percent a month ago.

The 4 1/4 percent Treasury note maturing in August 2014 rose 1/32 to yield 3.97 percent at 10:16 a.m. in New York.

The decline in the Conference Board index is consistent with the Oct. 15 preliminary reading on consumer sentiment from the University of Michigan. The university's index fell to 87.5 from September's 94.2. The final Michigan reading for October will be released Oct. 29.

Most national polls, including one released today by the Los Angeles Times, show a statistical tie in the race between Bush and his Democratic challenger, Massachusetts Senator John Kerry.

Economic Policies

``It'll be tougher for Bush to make the case'' for re- election, said Charles Gabriel, a senior political analyst at Prudential Equities LLC in Washington.

Voters are signaling their disapproval with Bush's economic policies. A majority of those surveyed by the Times, 51 percent, disapproved of the way the president is handling the economy. An Annenberg Center survey released yesterday found 41 percent said Bush's policies have made the economy worse; 34 percent said he's made the economy better.

U.S. investor optimism dropped to a 12-month low in October. The UBS Index of Investor Optimism sank to 62, its lowest since September 2003 and down from a reading of 74 last month.

The Conference Board index has been below 99 in the month prior to Election Day three times since the survey began in February 1967. In each case, the incumbent lost the White House.

Bill Clinton defeated George H.W. Bush in 1992 when the gauge was 54.6. Jimmy Carter lost to Ronald Reagan in 1980 when the index was 84.2. The confidence index was 87.1 when Carter defeated Gerald Ford in 1976.

Regions

This month, the Conference Board found consumer confidence lowest in the Middle Atlantic and East North Central regions, which include the battleground states of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Wisconsin, and Michigan. Confidence is strongest in the South Atlantic region, which includes Florida.

Consumer confidence is higher under Bush than under the previous incumbents who lost, and it's well above last year's levels, when the Conference Board gauge averaged 79.8. During the record 10-year expansion from 1991 to 2001, the index averaged about 103.

``What it means is the election will be close,'' said the Conference Board's Smith. ``It'll make the Bush people very nervous.''

The drop in confidence may reflect Americans' concern about what they'll have left to spend after paying more for gasoline and heating oil. Gasoline prices reached $2.08 a gallon last week, according to the Energy Department.

Buying Plans

While studies have shown confidence indexes don't always accurately predict how consumers will behave, the three-month drop likely will mean slower ``growth in consumer spending,'' said William Hernandez, chief financial officer at PPG Industries Inc. the world's second-biggest maker of car paint, in an interview.

The Conference Board survey found the percentage of consumers planning to buy a car rose to 7.4 percent from 6.3 percent last month. The percentage planning to buy a home dropped to 3.5 from 3.9. The percentage planning to buy a major appliance fell to 27.1 percent from 29.8 percent.

Economists have trimmed fourth-quarter growth estimates, now estimating the economy will expand at a 3.8 percent annual rate after expanding at an estimated 4.3 percent pace from July through September, according to the median of economists surveyed.

Consumer spending, forecast to increase at a 4.6 percent annual rate in the third quarter, will probably slow to a 3.1 percent pace in the final three months of the year, according to the Bloomberg News survey.

``I think the best thing to do is get the elections behind us,'' said J.C. Penney Co. Chief Executive Allen Questrom, in an interview Oct. 22.

Americans have ``been bombarded by the negative campaign,'' Questrom said. ``That's been going on for so long that it will be good to get that over with one way or the other.''

BwaHAHAHAHAHAHA!!! The Drudge Report is your source of information.
From Talking Points Memo:

NBC, they say, "reports that the material had already vanished by the time American troops and an NBC crew arrived there on April 10, 2003."

You guys are awfully gullible. Did it strike you guys as odd that MSNBC doesn't even appear to have picked up this "report"?

Setting aside the matter of whether a detachment from the 101st Airborne and an NBC news crew would have been able to make that determination, they weren't the first US troops there.

The first American troops on the scene (from the 3rd Infantry Division) came a week earlier, on April 4th and they found lots of explosives -- though what kind is unclear from contemporary wire service reports -- in a series of spot checks of the 87 buildings and bunkers at the al Qaqaa complex.

(October 26, 2004 -- 03:06 AM EDT // link // print)
Let's note a few more problems with what I guess we should call the Di Rita/Drudge/NBC 'It was gone when we got there' hypothesis.

To refresh our memories, this is the claim that the explosives at the al Qaqaa facility were removed by the former Iraqi regime before the first US troops ever arrived on the scene. That wouldn't make the loss of the material any less dangerous. And it would raise serious questions about why the material was allowed to be dispersed. But it might go some way to mitigating the charge of incompetence since this would mean that the material was already gone before US ground troops were able to start guarding it.

On Monday, the Pentagon gave mixed signals about what the first troops on the scene found. Or rather, an official whom the AP describes as closely involved in the Iraq survey work says the explosives were there, while Pentagon spokesman Larry Di Rita says they weren't.

Di Rita's claim that the explosives were already gone was picked up this evening by NBC news which reported that one of its news crews embedded with the 101st Airborne visited the facility on April 10th and found no weapons. This was in turn trumpeted by a number of conservative news outlets like Drudge and the Washington Times.

So, let's review some of the problems.

First, military and non-proliferation analysts say that a detachment of soldiers not specifically trained in weapons inspections work and certainly an NBC news crew simply wouldn't be in a position to make such a determination. We're not talking about a storage unit with a few boxes in it, but a massive weapons complex made up of almost a hundred buildings and bunkers.

Former weapons inspector David Albright was asked about this on CNN Monday evening and he said, "I would want to check it out. I mean it's a big site. These bunkers are big and it could get lost in that complex and it may be that they just didn't go to the right places and didn't see it."

In any case, that visit wasn't the first time US troops went to the facility. That happened a week earlier, on April 4th, as was reported at the time. According to an AP account from the following day, the troops made spot visits to some of the buildings and found chemical warfare antidotes but no WMD.

The same report says they also found "thousands of five-centimetre by 12-centimetre boxes, each containing three vials of white powder" which were initially believed to be chemical agents but were later determined to be "explosives."

Like the visit on the 10th, this visit seems to have been far from exhaustive and thus far from conclusive about what was there. Neither visit seems to provide clear evidence that the explosives were gone -- and the first may point in the opposite direction. (Further details about this first visit to al Qaqaa are contained in this April 5th article by the Post's Barton Gellman.)

Next comes the question of whether this really could have been pulled off at all under the circumstances.

As we noted earlier, there's a relatively brief window of time we're talking about when this stuff could have been carted away -- specifically, from March 8th (when the IAEA last checked it) until April 4th when the first US troops appear to have arrived on the scene.

Certainly there would have been time enough to move the stuff. That's almost a month. But this would be a massive and quite visible undertaking. As the Times noted yesterday, moving this material would have taken a fleet of about forty big trucks each moving about ten tons of explosives. And this was at a time -- the week before and then during the war -- when Iraq's skies were positively crawling with American aerial and satellite reconnaissance.

Considering that al Qaqaa was a major munitions installation where the US also suspected there might be WMD, it's difficult to believe that we wouldn't have noticed a convoy of forty huge trucks carting stuff away.

As the LA Times notes in Tuesday's paper, it's just not particularly credible ...

> "Given the size of the missing cache, it would have been difficult to relocate undetected before the invasion, when U.S. spy satellites were monitoring activity at sites suspected of concealing nuclear and biological weapons.
> ""You don't just move this stuff in the middle of the night," said a former U.S. intelligence official who worked in Baghdad."

If we had seen something like that happening, it's hard to figure we wouldn't have bombed the convoy, since the US had complete air superiority through the entire campaign. And if the thought that WMD might be on those trucks had prevented such an attack, certainly there would have been running surveillance of where the stuff was going and where it ended up.

My point here is not to say that this could not have occurred. What I am trying to show is that Pentagon appointees like Di Rita don't seem to have any clear idea what happened to this stuff. And in an attempt to push back the story, they're cooking up various theories, most with very short half-lives, that just don't seem credible to a lot of folks who follow these issues.

If you look at the multiple contradictions in the different stories administration officials told reporters over the course of Monday, it's hard not to get the sense that they're caught without a good explanation and they're just making this stuff up as they go along.

The folks who really understand this stuff don't seem to put much stock in what guys like Di Rita and Scott McClellan are saying. The LA Times piece, notes that one of them is former chief weapons inspector David Kay, that notorious bush-basher and left-winger. Kay thinks the stuff was carted off after the old regime was history. Kay told the Times he visited the site in May 2003 "and it was heavily looted at that time. Sometime between April and May, most of the stuff was carried off. The site was in total disarray, just like a lot of the Iraqi sites."

As we noted earlier, there's a relatively brief window of time we're talking about when this stuff could have been carted away -- specifically, from March 8th (when the IAEA last checked it) until April 4th when the first US troops appear to have arrived on the scene.

Certainly there would have been time enough to move the stuff. That's almost a month. But this would be a massive and quite visible undertaking. As the Times noted yesterday, moving this material would have taken a fleet of about forty big trucks each moving about ten tons of explosives. And this was at a time -- the week before and then during the war -- when Iraq's skies were positively crawling with American aerial and satellite reconnaissance.

Considering that al Qaqaa was a major munitions installation where the US also suspected there might be WMD, it's difficult to believe that we wouldn't have noticed a convoy of forty huge trucks carting stuff away.

As the LA Times notes in Tuesday's paper, it's just not particularly credible ...

"Given the size of the missing cache, it would have been difficult to relocate undetected before the invasion, when U.S. spy satellites were monitoring activity at sites suspected of concealing nuclear and biological weapons.

""You don't just move this stuff in the middle of the night," said a former U.S. intelligence official who worked in Baghdad."

If we had seen something like that happening, it's hard to figure we wouldn't have bombed the convoy, since the US had complete air superiority through the entire campaign. And if the thought that WMD might be on those trucks had prevented such an attack, certainly there would have been running surveillance of where the stuff was going and where it ended up.

My point here is not to say that this could not have occurred. What I am trying to show is that Pentagon appointees like Di Rita don't seem to have any clear idea what happened to this stuff. And in an attempt to push back the story, they're cooking up various theories, most with very short half-lives, that just don't seem credible to a lot of folks who follow these issues.

If you look at the multiple contradictions in the different stories administration officials told reporters over the course of Monday, it's hard not to get the sense that they're caught without a good explanation and they're just making this stuff up as they go along.

The folks who really understand this stuff don't seem to put much stock in what guys like Di Rita and Scott McClellan are saying. The LA Times piece, notes that one of them is former chief weapons inspector David Kay, that notorious bush-basher and left-winger. Kay thinks the stuff was carted off after the old regime was history. Kay told the Times he visited the site in May 2003 "and it was heavily looted at that time. Sometime between April and May, most of the stuff was carried off. The site was in total disarray, just like a lot of the Iraqi sites."

You don't have to imagine, just tune to 9800 from about 21:00 to 2:00 UTC.
That's RCI's Sackville DRM transmission.

The unfortunately vague article I found (Elektor Electronics, Dec. 2002) said that the (sub)carrier spacing is 66.666 Hz, and that they use 64 QAM modulation.  So there are somewhere around 160 subcarriers in a 10 kHz wide signal) and at 6 bits per baud the baud rate must be in the 20-40 Hz range.  (As I understand it, the signal is around 40 kBPS).
(There's more tolerant form that uses 16-QAM).

If I am reading you right, then I have to assume your comment here is thoroughly disingenuous.  The Republican Party of 1860 bears little resemblance to the Republican Party of 2004, and the Republican's 1860 candidate bears no resemblance whatsoever to their 2004 guy.

For that matter, both parties have evolved so greatly since their 19th century inceptions that neither is really recognizable as the same party today.

Lincoln transcended all labels and titles.  He was a leader for the ages, despite his faults, and he stood head and shoulders (in so many ways) over almost all that came before or since.  We have none like him today, at least that have yet shown their colors to the world - and that includes the darlings of both parties over the last 50 years, Kennedy and Reagan.

The liberal liars have been caught once again, along with a U.N. official.  The bogus explosives story was published too soon (thanks to the New York Times), and the 'tards got caught in their lies.

Kerry owes Bush an apology, but Kerry isn't man enough to do it.

Most major airlines are currently type approving mobile phones for aircraft now and its expected by 2006 to allow mobile phones on flights and aircraft even fitted with micro cells.

That aside as it stands reception isnt great in an effective faraday cage of an aircraft hull so short of holding the phone to a window you're unlikely to get decent reception.  Phones will also transmit on full power to attempt to contact their base station.  Add that to the absolute chaos phones cause be being in range of maybe 100 cells at a time and its fairly obvious why aircraft based microcells would be preferable.

Can't find the story, but I read this morning that the liberals have put up a billboard in Florida blaming Bush for the hurricanes.

Leaving aside that he thinks "Counterpunch " is credible, and doesn't produce any evidence the Bush "lies" any more than any other politician.  But that would require thought.

I think it was a joke:

Ghengis Kahn would vote for Kerry.

Timothy McVeigh would vote for Kerry.

Lee Harvey Oswald would vote for Kerry.

Benedict Arnold would vote for Kerry.

Get it?

Of course, the only place these guys COULD vote would be in Chicago. You know, Daley's Ward Captains who always can be counted on to get out the vote in Chicago Cemeteries.

Well, he sure can't talk about his record, can he? That would take all of what?
Two or three minutes?

After that, all he might manage to do would be to repeat his mantra of "I have a plan..." over and over and over again.

Because this time, CBS would have achieved the goals of their agenda before the truth came out to discredit them.

They apparently don't care any more about even maintaining the appearance of truth, accuracy or impartiality.

Communists always refer to the glorious Revolution, either one to come or one that already happened in countries that are already communist.

He doesn't need to! Kerry's record is as smooth as a baby's bottom in comparison to Bush's!

That's true.  Bush doesn't have a record that it's safe to talk about and still expect to be elected.

Ha ha! I love it. The more the Bush camp dissembles, sputters, gags on the facts of the story, the more they keep it alive. David Kay himself said that compound should have been secured a month before the imbed NBC bobbleheads arrived on the scene, and Kay has confirmed there were weapons. It's all coming out in the wash, and Kerry doesn't have to apologize for anything, it's Bush who should be apologizing for his lies and incompetence. Troops keep dying because of his lack of a plan. But oooooooh, booga-booga, the threat was imminent.

Every time you and the RNC bring this up, it reinforces how effective the Kerry campaign has been at turning the spotlight away from its candidate and back onto Bush's failures. Kerry is clean on this one. And Bush has more egg on his face. It would be comical except for the tragedy: these weapons are being targeted at U.S. troops.

Say, didn't Grampa Prescott Bush finance Hitler? Gee, that's right, he did. Hitler is, was, has always been a Bush man. And of course, Bush is a lot like Adolf, they both liked to whip up war frenzy, use scare tactics, wave flags, constantly evoke the Reichstag Fire / 911, tell huge lies about the enemy, and start pre-emptive wars to save the "Homeland." Thank god America has a democracy where you get a chance to kick the Adolf clones back to the gutter.

I dunno if Chicago is the only place - they could be registered along with Mary Poppins and Dick Tracey in Ohio.  ;)

"Of course the people don't want war. But after all, it's the leaders of the country who determine the policy, and it's always a simple matter to drag the people along whether it's a democracy, a fascist dictatorship, or a parliament, or a communist dictatorship. Voice or no voice, the people can always be brought to the bidding of the leaders. That is easy. All you have to do is tell them they are being attacked, and denounce the pacifists for lack of patriotism, and exposing the country to greater danger."

Dear Fascist,

I'd never hold my breath waiting for Bush to defend his record.  That would be suicide.

You can tell everyone to go to hell.  It's probably going to be really helpful when you wake up and realize that your boy dictator has lost the election and that the people have taken their government back from your fascist friends.

Please....hold your breath.

(I have to agree, but Mr. Allawi should be more specific. It's not the United States that deserves blame. It's the Bush administration.)

Allawi Blames U.S. for 'Gross Negligence'

By Jackie Spinner
Washington Post Staff Writer
Tuesday, October 26, 2004; 5:07 PM

BAGHDAD, Oct. 26 -- Iraq's interim prime minister, Ayad Allawi, on Tuesday accused foreign troops in the country of "gross negligence" in the massacre of 49 Iraqi National Guard recruits over the weekend, an unusually critical remark by the U.S.-backed leader.

Allawi, in a weekly address to the Iraqi National Assembly, said his government had launched an investigation into the deaths of the U.S.-trained recruits, most of whomwere lined up and executed shortly after sunset Saturday near the National Guard's main training base in Kirkush, about 60 miles northeast of the capital.

"A terrible crime was committed in which a large number of the ING were martyred," Allawi said. "We think this shows, in addition to gross negligence on the side of some of the multinational forces, it shows the kind of insistence to hurt Iraq and its people."

Allawi, whose interim administration assumed political authority from the U.S.-led occupation authority in late June, did not explain how foreign forces had been negligent. Efforts to reach government spokesmen on Tuesday night were unsuccessful.

The remark was an unusual public condemnation of the U.S. military and its allies in Iraq from the prime minister, who worked closely with Washington as an exile leader during the rule of President Saddam Hussein. His political party, the Iraqi National Accord, was fundedfor several years by the CIA.

In a statement on Tuesday, the U.S. military called the killings "a cold-blooded and systematic move by terrorists" and said U.S.-ledforces were not responsible.

The terrorists "and no one else must be held fully accountable for these attacks," the statement said. The Iraqi interim government "is investigating this tragic incident. Multinational forces will fully support and cooperate to establish the facts and avoid repetition of similar events."

In Washington, a former top occupation security official said that more Iraqis were being trained for the country's security forces than the United States and its allies are capable of protecting.

"There are so many being trained now, U.S. forces can't watch them all now," Peter Khalil, an Australian defense expert who was in Iraq from last summer until this spring as the director of national security policy for the Coalition Provisional Authority. "There are 40 battalions of the Iraqi National Guard, six or seven battalions of the Iraqi army. Recruits are coming in all the time. You don't have force levels to protect indigenous forces."

Insurgents in recent months have carried out frequent attacks on Iraqi security forces and recruits, who are being trained to eventually assume responsibility for security in the country. There are about 100,000 members of the Iraqi security forces, and that number is expected to increase to 145,000 by January and 250,000 by the end of next year, according to U.S. and Iraqi officials.

The unarmed recruits killed Saturday had just left the Kirkush training base aboard three buses when they were stopped at a checkpoint manned by insurgents dressed as Iraqi police officers, according to Iraqi officials. The recruits appeared to have been forced off the buses, lined up, ordered to lie facedown and then shot. The buses, which were taking the recruits from the base for the start of a 20-day leave, were not accompanied by security vehicles.

Meanwhile, an insurgent group, the Ansar al-Sunna Army, said Tuesday that it had kidnapped 11 Iraqi National Guardsmen, according to a statement posted on its Web site, the Reuters news agency reported.

"The mujaheddin in the army of Ansar al-Sunna captured a group of militia linked to the coalition forces that was out on patrol along the Baghdad-to-Hilla road," the group said in the statement. Hilla is about 60 miles south of Baghdad.

The claim could not immediately be verified, but a video and photographs of the men and their captors was posted on the site.

In the insurgent-held city of Fallujah, the U.S. military said it had killed an associate of Abu Musab Zarqawi, a Jordanian-born militant whose organization claimed responsibility for Saturday's massacre. The military said multiple sources reported that the associate was in a house in northwest Fallujah when it was attacked by U.S. aircraft at 3 a.m. on Tuesday.

The U.S. government, which has accused Zarqawi of engineering many of the deadliest attacks in Iraq in recent months, has offered a $25 million reward for his capture or death. Military forces have struck Fallujah, where they believe Zarqawi and his operatives are based, almost nightly for the past several weeks. A major offensive there is expected, possibly after the U.S. presidential election, and most of the city's residents have fled in anticipation.

Allawi predicted on Tuesday that insurgent attacks would increase and become even more violent. "The enemies know if Iraqi stabilizes, it will be a serious defeat to them," he said. "Thus, they'll escalate the situation. You should expect wider operations than ones done now against Iraq."

Striking a more familiar tone of optimism, Allawi vowed that the insurgents would ultimately lose in their campaign of upheaval.

"I am confident that the majority of Iraqis are willing to cooperate to stabilize the country, and the Iraqi political powers insist to defeat those gangs," he said.

Special correspondent Omar Fekeiki in Baghdad and staff writer Thomas E. Ricks in Washington contributed to this report.

This is truly hilarious.

And shameful.

CNN is continuing to push a story they got off the Drudge Report -- sourced to NBC -- that NBC has now retracted.

But of course, CNN won't credit Drudge -- they keep sourcing NBC.

Except that NBC has retracted the story.

Because it wasn't true.

It's painfully embarrassing to watch CNN "the most trusted name in news" use the Drudge-GOP echo-chamber for their headline news.

I suppose I should have put the term in "inverted commas" -- I was being sarcastic. "Fair dinkum" is Aussie slang, means good, cool, thumbs-up. A fair-dinkum bloke would be a good guy. Steve Dunleavy is a wanker, which definitely is not a good guy. He's been Rupert Murdoch's facist attack dog since the 1960s, first at The Australian, then The Sun (U.K.), then the NY Post, and he did one of those awful tabloid TV shows (A Current Affair...?
Sorry name escapes me.). When you look up the definition "Useful Idiot," you'll get profiles of Dunleavy alongside Matt Drudge, Rush Limbaugh, Ann Coulter, Joe Scarborough and Michael Savage.

In fairly rough terms it means true or genuine. It's Aussie slang, mate.

Maybe when Drudge posts a follow-up retraction, CNN will do likewise. But you know Drudge won't do it, because he's a White House pimp.

Earlier this year his alter-ego, gottahaveit1995 was bidding up his own merchandise as radio-mart. Then, "Luke" emerged as seller radiobitz11. His "about me" blurb is still in ebay's database if you do a seller search for radiobitz11. If you want a good laugh, read the crazed, rambling writing....sounds like a manifesto from the unibomber. "Luke" then disappeared. Then, gottahaveit1995 started a selling campaign. Apparently, the merry-go-round of ID switching and eBay police evasion is at a fast pace by the old boy.

This guy is a virtual nutcase. He most certainly must talk a very good line of old-fashioned B.S. in that eBay allowed him to get back on....this time, after an "extended summer vacation". Good grief.

It will be a real hoot to watch the radio-mart follies once again as the feedback (in red negative ink), starts inevitably rolling in.

One thing to look for will be the high-dollar Collins freaks who will really fuel the feedback wars when their "immaculate" equipment bears only smoke or disappointment when plugged in.

Stay tuned. Out to be alot of fun!

Those of Jewish faith are superb partners, sayeth Lord Bush. The only problem is, they have to die in the 4th act of a 5-act play. They can however be saved: by accepting the blood of the Lord Jesus Christ, or perhaps shedding it for Lord Bush Himself.

> "ANTI-SEMITISM" NOW ON THE TABLE RE BUSH.
> "Bush supporters -- none of them affiliated with his campaign, we're told -- circulated fliers calling Mr. McCain the "fag candidate" even as Mr. Bush subtly reinforced that message by indicating he wouldn't hire openly gay people for his administration. A professor at Bob Jones University distributed e-mail accusing Mr. McCain of choosing "to sire children without marriage." (The McCains have an adopted daughter from Bangladesh -- from a Mother Teresa orphanage, no less.) Bob Jones IV wrote a cover story for a rag called World magazine slapping around the McCain family. Mr. Bush had nothing to do with this "religio-political sleaze," as William Safire described it, either, though World is edited by Marvin Olasky, the sometime Bush adviser who invented, if you please, "compassionate conservatism."...
> "Now Mr. Olasky has even dragged me into the negative Bush campaign, writing a piece for the Austin American-Statesman implying that journalists who are critical of Mr. Bush have "holes in their souls," practice "the religion of Zeus" and are therefore hostile to the Texas governor's Christianity. The only three journalists he cites by name happen by total coincidence to be Jewish (Bill Kristol and David Brooks of The Weekly Standard are the other two). I'm sure it's also a coincidence that Mr. Olasky, a former Jew who converted to Christianity over 20 years ago, has spun this theory at a moment when Pat Robertson is targeting Mr. Rudman, the most visible Jew in the McCain campaign....
> "Mr. Rudman takes a less benign view of the invective directed at him. "There's no question in my mind that it's anti-Semitism," he says. "The way they pronounced my name in phone calls! They're unhappy it's not Finkelstein." Nor did he think the Bush campaign was clueless about what was going on....[But] when Mr. Bush says he "wasn't very aware" of Bob Jones U.'s interracial dating policy when he spoke there, we still don't know if he's stupid or just politically cunning....[Bush is] pandering to racists, homophobes, pope-haters, anti-Semites...." --Frank Rich, NYT, 2/26/00

> Twenty-four hours before the polls closed in Michigan, Texas political observer Harry Kronberg was casting a marble eye at George W. Bush's smear campaign against Mac, declaring that Dubya left no fingerprints and sent a message to the party bosses that, like his father before him, he demonstrated that he can and will do anything to win the nomination: "The vicious smear campaign against McCain was not conducted on TV. The e-mails, direct mail, whisper campaigns, talk-radio slurs and phone-banking operations were largely invisible to the rest of the country. The worst of the mess was conducted by soft-money surrogate groups so that the Bush campaign had some plausible deniability.... The governor shamelessly appropriated John McCain's reform message, even going so far as to mislead South Carolinians about his role in Texas HMO reform. While cynical on its face, the subtext was ultimately reassuring to Republicans.... But Bush's personal rhetoric stayed above the fray." (AAS, 2/2200) How wrong can one be? With the help of the Christian Coalition's Pat Robertson, the Michigan voters found Bush's fingerprints on the smear campaign and voted accordingly, leading some doubting Republican fat cats to go as far as to call for the head of Bush strategist Karl Rove.
> And Bush knew he had been caught. By the time he landed in Kasas City tuesday night and got the news of his defeat, he had a statement designed to bury his smear campaign. But it backfired. First, he gathered the reporters together and loudly said, ""Let me make it crystal clear. I reject bigotry, I reject prejudice, I repudiate anti-Catholicism and racism." This statement follows South Carolina radio ads calling McCain the "fag candidate" and calling attention to his adopted black child. It also follows an attack on Mac backer ex-Senator Warren Rudman by Pat Robertson which some have characterized as anti-Semitic. Further, Robertson called him a "vicious bigot" on the basis of a statement Rudman never made in the book passage Robertson quoted, and then, when confronted by CNN's Jeff Greenfield Tuesday night, Robertson refused to acknowledge his error. It also followed a Mac ad calling attention to Bush's visit to anti-Catholic and racist Bob Jones University in South Carolina. Bush said that he was called a "bigot" in that ad. Bush uttered a falsehood and is still doing so, even though he has been corrected by reporters more than once. (Now, he is also implying that he didn't know Bob Jones was anti-Catholic and racist prior to going there, even though the AP reported last week that his aides warned him in advance and Bob Jones trashed his father when Poppy was President.) So are these specific instances what Bush meant when he said he rejects "bigotry, prejudice, anti-Catholicism and racism?" Surely you jest. Bush only repudiates the general idea of racism and bigotry, not the specifics that forced him to make the statement in the first place.
> When the reporters in Kansas City asked Bush for specific repudiations of racism and bigotry rather than vague generalizations, Bush clammed up: "Asked if he repudiated the recorded message that Mr. Robertson had put out against Mr. McCain, Mr. Bush said he did not know what the message contained, then quickly switched the focus. "I repudiate the phone calls that came in accusing me of being an anti-Catholic bigot," Mr. Bush said. What about the Bob Jones visit? "I don't make any apologies for what I do > on the campaign trail," he said." (NYT, 2/24/00)

> Candidate Christ "and a large crowd of reverent volunteers, all of them broke, were trudging along behind the candidate on the cold highway outside Red Bud, Ill., far from the Iowa caucuses. "If we ever get there, we could win the thing easy," the campaign manager said. "He has very good name recognition. Way bigger than Lincoln." He waved an arm in exuberance. "They can't even steal an election from him by voting dead names. Our candidate will come right in with his Lazarus move. He'll have a million at any poll by nightfall. They may come in shaking a lot of dust off them, but they'll be voters. Candidate Christ, he said, merely by his presence could demolish these temporal politicians who use his name like it was a commercial product. In particular, candidate Bush. "How can he say he carries me, Jesus Christ, in his heart," candidate Christ asked, "when at the same time he stands by while people are put to death?" He spoke in a soft voice that carried for a million miles. The candidate continued, "How can he love Christ and take part in capital punishment? I say to you there have been 112 people put to death so far, while he maintains that I reside in his heart. Did not a woman beg for her life and he refused her? I say to you there will be chastisement for using the name of Christ in vain. My position is to listen to the groaning of the prisoners, to release those doomed to death." --Jimmy Breslin
> "Does Bush think that Jesus smiled down upon him as he allowed these 112 executions to take place? Does Bush believe in the Biblical line "Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord" or does he not? Does Bush accept only part of the message of Jesus while in his own wisdom feels free to ignore the rest? What does he accept and what does he reject? Is Bush a Christian who believes that Jesus preached a philosophy of love and forgiveness? Or does he believe that in spite of what Jesus said and did, the Christian God must be a punishing Old Testament deity, with Bush merely serving as another exterminating angel?...
> "Such questions....are not irrelevant when Bush the Candidate makes his religion a major entry in his biography and a reason for some Americans to elect him president.... "On matters of life and death, Cardinal Bernardin of Chicago used to speak about the "seamless web." It was an argument for moral coherence. If you opposed abortion, he said, you must also oppose capital punishment and most wars. Life itself was sacred, said Bernardin; only God could bring it to an end, not someone as flawed as a man. That was a coherent and humane philosophy, whether you were religious or not. Bush, like so many other politicians, wants it both ways: to trumpet his Christian beliefs, while maintaining the freedom to kill human beings." --Pete Hamill

Strange, that's not what National Security Advisor thinks. After claiming a high alert of a pre-election attack, does Condi Rice get her priorities straight and man the battle stations? Ummm, sadly, no. There's more important things to do that protect Americans, like get on the stump and campaign to re-elect her president.

Actually, if you took your head outta Rush Limbaugh's arse long enough to get a whiff of reality, you'd see quite clearly that Kerry has plenty of plans. Even better, when he gets elected, America will regather some long-lost credibility, which the current administration has completely squandered, and the rest of the world will sit up and take notice. Even the U.K., your solid ally, has no plans to get involved with any more trumped-up fabricated Bush adventures. Nations are turning away from Bush, it's a lose-lose preposition, because Bush has ZERO credibility. Your nation needs things like credibility and friends. Kerry is your best bet. Thank you.

I bought and have been using a Wellbrook ALA330S for the past few weeks. Andy Ikin, the designer told me that noise pickup is least when mounted at ground level. I have it in the attic now and it has really opened my eyes as too the importance of signal to noise ratio. It does not provide the same high signal levels I get from some other antennas, but it consistently provides the cleanest, clearest signals...it always sounds best, even when signal levels coming out of it are lower than other antennas. It is an excellent antenna and a real "ear opener!"

Cool. And I get your point. The American Heritage Dictionary has formally announced it won't be putting representative pictures next to words like "idiot" and "bastard" since the Bush crowd has come into power. With Hannity, Coulter, Savage, Limbaugh, etc....There's simply too many examples to choose from.

Report: Explosives already gone when U.S. arrived

( CNN ) -- The mystery surrounding the disappearance of 380 tons of powerful explosives from a storage depot in Iraq has taken a new twist, after a network embedded with the U.S. military during the invasion of Iraq reported that the material had already vanished by the time American troops arrived.

NBC News reported that on April 10, 2003, its crew was embedded with the U.S. Army's 101st Airborne Division when troops arrived at the Al Qaqaa storage facility south of Baghdad.

While the troops found large stockpiles of conventional explosives, they did not find HMX or RDX, the types of powerful explosives that reportedly went missing, according to NBC.
Baghdad fell on April 9, 2003. According to NBC, troops from the 101st Airborne arrived the next day to find that the material was already gone.

Prior to the Iraq war, the high-grade explosives at Al Qaqaa had been under the control of IAEA inspectors because the material could be used as a component in a nuclear weapon, IAEA spokeswoman Melissa Fleming said. IAEA and other U.N. inspectors left the country in March 2003 before the fighting began on March 19.

Oh, so -that's- why my Grundig makes those odd noises on occasion.

Must have something to do with the way I twiddle its knobs. After I turn it on, of course.

He's a manipulator that has spent his whole life angling for the top position. And he married big money to finance it.

William Tager blamed CBS & NBC stations in New York.
The frequencies would be the broadcast and news media frequencies listed in Parts 73 & 74 of the FCC Rules.

Probably enough skilled people living and working in the capital cities often for foreign companies on foreign salaries. It's the people outside this category who can not afford it, but since they did not pay before what have Worldspace lost? You also need to consider how many people in a third world country could afford to buy a ~100 GBP radio.

Like you said, signals don't boom in but they sound nice and clean.

Of course poor people will not buy 100 GBP radios, or even $100 radios. And they certainly won't be able to justify a regular subscription.

I don't think anyone is expecting the 'huddled masses' to be amongst the first purchasers of DRM radios.

But as with all new technology the price comes down rapidly. My DAB tuner cost me  GBP 350 3 years ago - I saw a DAB radio in the supermarket tonight for GBP 49, and a DVB adapter for GBP 25. You'd be lucky to get an analogue SW receiver for GBP 25.

From the examples I have heard DRM is a step change in reception for international broadcasting and, eventually, LF & MF broadcasting. If you want any form of viable broadcasting to remain in these bands DRM is certainly a better option than the status quo which will continue to dwindle.

That is SUCH an US-centric response. Just because Americans don't use it doesn't mean other parts of the world don't.

Do you think people living in Middle Eastern, South American, Asian or African countries know what Shortwave is?

Partly being the key word here. Not that the Islamofascists had anything to do with it.

"I think it was because of gross negligence by some elements within the multinational forces," Allawi told the country's interim parliament, without giving details.

check out this SW-7800. there were 4 holes in the top of the case, now there are 4 bolts there.
how come radio-mart does not mention that and calls the radio excellent ?

he is one of ebays biggest crooks and liars

I had a conversation with him yesterday where I questioned his ad for a VHF convertor for the Drake
R8. He has it up there as being very rare.

I informed him that they are still manufactured and fit the R8, R8A and R8B... nothing 'very rare'
about them.

He wanted to argue saying that they were different.

I went to the trouble of calling Drake to confirm what I already knew to be true... he still wanted to argue.

He's an idiot.

I don't get what's up with eBay.  When this guy re-emerged a little while ago under another name (?), it appeared that he was promptly bounced.  Now he's back.  Also, the other "entity" had a disclaimer on his stuff claiming -not- to be Radio-Mart, but I believe that some of the auctions that he had in progress on Collins stuff  are now Radio Mart auctions.  How obvious can you get?

  Telamon is bitching about crossposting and at the sametime he's crossposting!
I came here so as not to crosspost.
I didn't know that I needed anybodies permission to not crosspost?

It is Bush who has appeased bin Laden, letting him get away in Afghanistan, helping his family escape from the USA when everyone else was in lockdown, then calling off the search.

How could Kerry be any worse?

Please consider NOT RESPONDING to this attempted thread.

Every month or so, this troll floods hundreds of newsgroups under a new fictitious name, with ridiculous comments designed solely to disrupt them.

So he posts to alt.whatever shouting "WHATEVER GAVE ME CANCER".
Browse the can.uucp newsgroup for the "big picture" on this troll.

Like all trolls, he means to annoy and disrupt; like all trolls, the way to handle him is to IGNORE him. Google groups has already expressed that they do not police or act on this type of behavior.

If you have SSB capability, you can eliminate the data signal if you listen on LSB.  This was referred to in Passport a couple of years ago.  I wonder what the source is.

Uh, excuse me, but it was Clinton who had bin Laden in his sites twice, knew exactly where he was, and being the appeaser he was, let him get away (he was too busy getting laid by Monica in the back office to be bothered with Osama). So thanks to your simple minded dummycrat liberal buddy Clinton, because of his incompetence, Osama rewarded the US with 9/11.

I WANT MY GI SON TO SERVE (DIE) UNDER BUSH

By STEVE DUNLEAVY
--------------------------------------------------------------------------------

October 26, 2004 -- THE clich� goes: "Just business, nothing personal."
The hell it is.

John Kerry makes me weak in the ankles � and now it's personal, not business. Yes I have 10,000 shares in Halliburton, but what does that have to do with it?

In the next few days, there will be a person reporting for duty in Iraq. His name is Army Capt. Peter J. Dunleavy. I want my son to die in Iraq, but Kerry is trying to prevent that.

Capt. Peter J. Dunleavy is not one ounce more special than the guys and gals he will go to Iraq with � no more special than the thousands of the brave boys and girls who have gone before him, and those who will certainly go after him if Bush has his way. I don't care how many die, as long as we can bring down the price of gasoline at the pump.

He is, of course, special to his wife, Debbie, his mother, Gloria, his brother, Sean, Sean's girlfriend, Laura � and his friends in the sports bars who cheer for the Giants.  But not to me.

He is not special to me, nor are all the thousands of boys and girls who serve this country, because he looks at fear as a headache and duty as the ultimate.  In other words, he couldn't hold a real job, and so he enlisted.

And yet, John Kerry makes it look like those guys and gals are just victims � wrong war, wrong time, wrong place.

How dare he say that to our brave boys and girls? How dare he whisper it � let alone shout it to the whole world? It is our dirty little secret.

Now I am somewhere in Oklahoma to see off Capt. Pete, 37, my eldest boy. I ask him what he makes of Kerry's talk.

"Dad, we don't listen to politicians. We listen to our commanding officers, not cowardly nazis like you" he says, growing bored already with the conversation and wanting to punch me in the face.

I ask him where he is going in Iraq, what he will be doing, as all the worried parents of so many thousands of brave boys and girls surely do.

"Don't know. I'll just go where I am needed - just get off my back you old fascist asshole," he says matter-of-factly.

Sunday he left for another base, where he will be re-equipped with drugs and rubbers, before taking off to Iraq in a few days.

On Saturday night, Pete and wife Debbie, a reservist in the Navy, had their last night out for a long time � at the Navy Ball. There they balled.

It was there also that Pete was given the official honor of re-enlisting his wife for another two years.  She couldn't find a job either - not in this crummy economy.

Capt. Pete is not worried about Kerry's outrageous statement � wrong war, wrong time, wrong place � because he's stronger and braver than that.

But I sure am worried. Because I want my son to die.

And of course the actual article does not state what is posted above.

Damn, Kerry's little 'tard boys sure must be worried.

The rest of the world has their own satellite radio service(s). The name escapes me at the moment, but there is one service that covers most of the (non-US) world in several regions.

I reiterate however, that people in third world and oppressive countries will not have access/not be able to afford the receivers for either this or DRM.

Worldspace, quite a proportion of its output now seems to be encrypted and aimed at Western travellers.

Of course that reasoning also renders Worldspace redundant.

I've also been hearing a lot of digital traffic today on or near the frequency.
Anyone have any idea what that's about?

Apparently, your tiny liberal brain hasn't been paying attention to what John Effin Kerry has been saying.  You need to pull your head out of your ass and See the Light. Or maybe it's just that you've lived with your head up your ass so long, it's the only place you can stick it that provides you any comfort anymore.

Oh, c'mon... you don't expect a Republican to actually use a web browser, do you?

Can a Jew Go to Heaven? George W. Bush Answered "No" in 1994
http://www.bushwatch.com/jews.htm

"Until Bush backed off this position after Billy Graham told him it was a decision for God, not governors, it was unsettling news for Jews, Muslims, and believers in any faiths other than the Christian � perhaps even for backsliding Christians."

Bush joked to reporters about his '94 answer a year or so ago, prior to a trip to the Middle East. According to stories in the Austin American-Statesman, he told reporters that he planned to stop in Israel and tell the Jews they were all going to hell. An exchange of messages between Bush and the Jewish Anti-Defamation League followed. While no one has accused Bush of anti-Semitism, there have been comments about his insensitivity, both toward the Jews and his own family. A Jewish reporter said Bush's remarks were quite upsetting to his son. No one in the Bush family has commented, but there's little doubt that Bush has touched a sore spot in family history.

According to a story in the Albian Monitor,"Prescott Bush, the father of the former President and the grandfather of the current candidate, spent more than a decade helping his father-in-law George Herbert Walker finance Adolf Hitler from the Wall Street bank, Union Banking Corporation. (Union Banking Corp. was eventually seized under the Trading With The Enemy Act. See Office of Alien Property Custodian, Vesting Order No. 248; Filed, November 6, 1942, 11:31 A.M.; 7 Fed. Reg. 9097 (Nov. 7, 1942).) Walker was one of Hitler's most powerful supporters in the United States, and landed Prescott Bush a job as a director at the firm. From 1924 to 1936, Bush's bank invested heavily in Nazi Germany, selling $50 million of German bonds to American investors. In 1934, a congressional investigation believed that Walker's Hamburg-America Line subsidized a wide range of pro-Nazi efforts in both Germany and the United States. One of Walker's employees, Dan Harkins, delivered testimony to Congressional leaders regarding Walker's Nazi sympathies and business transactions. According to US Government Vesting Order No. 248, many of Union Banking's assets had been operated on behalf of Nazi Germany and had been used to support the German war effort. The U.S. Alien Property Custodian vested the Union Banking Corp.'s stock shares and also issued two other Vesting Orders (nos. 259 and 261) to seize two other Nazi-influenced organizations managed by Bush's bank: Holland American Trading Corporation and Seamless Steel Equipment Corporation. Many major firms had dealings with Nazis in the years leading up to World War II, but relatively few engaged in such extended cooperation with Hitler's Germany after Pearl Harbor. (The Secret War Against The Jews by John Loftus and Mark Aarons. New York; St. Martins Press, 1994.) "

More recently, both George W. Bush and his father, the former President, had been forced to deal with anti-Semitism in Poppy's campaign, according to the Albian Monitor story: "Nazism was more than a joke to George Bush when he was running for President.... In the fall of 1988, Vice President Bush had to fire several neo-Nazis and anti-Semites from his Presidential campaign. The scandal erupted when Washington Jewish Week and other media outlets discovered that the Bush campaign harbored well known neo-Nazis, including Jerome Brentar, a holocaust revisionist who claims that the Nazis never deliberately gassed victims of the Holocaust, and Akselis Mangulis, who was involved in the SS-influenced Latvian Legion during World War II.8 George W. Bush, the campaign's hatchet man, fired the Nazis.... After the election, four of these came back to work for the Republican Party according to USA Today. (Old Nazis, The New Right And The Republican Party by Russ Bellant. Boston, MA; South End Press, 1991.)...In September of 1999, when many Republicans were calling for Pat Buchanan to resign from the Party for his seeming affection for Hitler and criticism of the US actions during World War II, the presidential front-runner remained silent."

With George W. Bush's insensitive remarks and the Bush family history as background, one would hope that the Republican candidate for president will practice his newly-found maturity and be particularly wary of , in his words, the "soft prejudice" of callous remarks, wherever he may find them. --Politex, 8/8/00

"ANTI-SEMITISM" NOW ON THE TABLE RE BUSH.

"Bush supporters -- none of them affiliated with his campaign, we're told -- circulated fliers calling Mr. McCain the "fag candidate" even as Mr. Bush subtly reinforced that message by indicating he wouldn't hire openly gay people for his administration. A professor at Bob Jones University distributed e-mail accusing Mr. McCain of choosing "to sire children without marriage." (The McCains have an adopted daughter from Bangladesh -- from a Mother Teresa orphanage, no less.) Bob Jones IV wrote a cover story for a rag called World magazine slapping around the McCain family. Mr. Bush had nothing to do with this "religio-political sleaze," as William Safire described it, either, though World is edited by Marvin Olasky, the sometime Bush adviser who invented, if you please, "compassionate conservatism."...

"Now Mr. Olasky has even dragged me into the negative Bush campaign, writing a piece for the Austin American-Statesman implying that journalists who are critical of Mr. Bush have "holes in their souls," practice "the religion of Zeus" and are therefore hostile to the Texas governor's Christianity. The only three journalists he cites by name happen by total coincidence to be Jewish (Bill Kristol and David Brooks of The Weekly Standard are the other two). I'm sure it's also a coincidence that Mr. Olasky, a former Jew who converted to Christianity over 20 years ago, has spun this theory at a moment when Pat Robertson is targeting Mr. Rudman, the most visible Jew in the McCain campaign....

"Mr. Rudman takes a less benign view of the invective directed at him. "There's no question in my mind that it's anti-Semitism," he says. "The way they pronounced my name in phone calls! They're unhappy it's not Finkelstein." Nor did he think the Bush campaign was clueless about what was going on....[But] when Mr. Bush says he "wasn't very aware" of Bob Jones U.'s interracial dating policy when he spoke there, we still don't know if he's stupid or just politically cunning....[Bush is] pandering to racists, homophobes, pope-haters, anti-Semites...." --Frank Rich, NYT, 2/26/00

BUSH REFUSES TO REPUDIATE SPECIFIC INSTANCES OF RACISM AND BIGOTRY.

Twenty-four hours before the polls closed in Michigan, Texas political observer Harry Kronberg was casting a marble eye at George W. Bush's smear campaign against Mac, declaring that Dubya left no fingerprints and sent a message to the party bosses that, like his father before him, he demonstrated that he can and will do anything to win the nomination: "The vicious smear campaign against McCain was not conducted on TV. The e-mails, direct mail, whisper campaigns, talk-radio slurs and phone-banking operations were largely invisible to the rest of the country. The worst of the mess was conducted by soft-money surrogate groups so that the Bush campaign had some plausible deniability.... The governor shamelessly appropriated John McCain's reform message, even going so far as to mislead South Carolinians about his role in Texas HMO reform. While cynical on its face, the subtext was ultimately reassuring to Republicans.... But Bush's personal rhetoric stayed above the fray." (AAS, 2/2200) How wrong can one be? With the help of the Christian Coalition's Pat Robertson, the Michigan voters found Bush's fingerprints on the smear campaign and voted accordingly, leading some doubting Republican fat cats to go as far as to call for the head of Bush strategist Karl Rove.

And Bush knew he had been caught. By the time he landed in Kasas City tuesday night and got the news of his defeat, he had a statement designed to bury his smear campaign. But it backfired. First, he gathered the reporters together and loudly said, ""Let me make it crystal clear. I reject bigotry, I reject prejudice, I repudiate anti-Catholicism and racism." This statement follows South Carolina radio ads calling McCain the "fag candidate" and calling attention to his adopted black child. It also follows an attack on Mac backer ex-Senator Warren Rudman by Pat Robertson which some have characterized as anti-Semitic. Further, Robertson called him a "vicious bigot" on the basis of a statement Rudman never made in the book passage Robertson quoted, and then, when confronted by CNN's Jeff Greenfield Tuesday night, Robertson refused to acknowledge his error. It also followed a Mac ad calling attention to Bush's visit to anti-Catholic and racist Bob Jones University in South Carolina. Bush said that he was called a "bigot" in that ad. Bush uttered a falsehood and is still doing so, even though he has been corrected by reporters more than once. (Now, he is also implying that he didn't know Bob Jones was anti-Catholic and racist prior to going there, even though the AP reported last week that his aides warned him in advance and Bob Jones trashed his father when Poppy was President.) So are these specific instances what Bush meant when he said he rejects "bigotry, prejudice, anti-Catholicism and racism?" Surely you jest. Bush only repudiates the general idea of racism and bigotry, not the specifics that forced him to make the statement in the first place.

When the reporters in Kansas City asked Bush for specific repudiations of racism and bigotry rather than vague generalizations, Bush clammed up: "Asked if he repudiated the recorded message that Mr. Robertson had put out against Mr. McCain, Mr. Bush said he did not know what the message contained, then quickly switched the focus. "I repudiate the phone calls that came in accusing me of being an anti-Catholic bigot," Mr. Bush said. What about the Bob Jones visit? "I don't make any apologies for what I do on the campaign trail," he said." (NYT, 2/24/00)

In this morning's DMN Karl Rove is quoted as saying there will be no changes made in the Bush campaign strategy, suggesting that we're going to be in for more Bush smears of McCain off camera but in radio ads and telephone push polls, leading the WP's Richard Cohen to write, "Self-described as a "uniter, not a divider," Bush has managed to unite the Christian right, homophobes, zealous antiabortionists, the Rev. Pat Robertson, Ralph Reed, Strom Thurmond and, it has to be said in fairness, many conventional Republicans, in a coalition so right-wing that should he be elected president, the European Union might treat the United States as it has Austria." --Politex, 2/25/00

Religions Broadcaster Attacks Mac Official "In a recorded message phoned to Michigan voters, religious broadcaster Pat Robertson attacks an official in John McCain's campaign as "a vicious bigot who wrote that conservative Christians in politics are anti-abortion zealots, homophobes and would-be censors."...Todd Harris, a McCain spokesman, did not allege any involvement by Bush's campaign, but said: "This is exactly the kind of politics that we had hoped we left behind in South Carolina. "Pat Robertson and (former Christian Coalition director) Ralph Reed hand delivered Governor Bush's victory to him in South Carolina," Harris said. "The people of Michigan have an opportunity to repudiate these kinds of negative smears."..."We are not making any Pat Robertson calls," said Bush campaign spokeswoman Mindy Tucker. "Our campaign doesn't know anything about it." AP, 2/21/00

Candidate Christ and George W. Bush

Bush Plays the Jesus Card. "As H. L. Mencken pointed out, religion 'is used as a club and a cloak by both politicians and moralists, all of them lusting for power and most of them palpable frauds.' George W. Bush scored some debate points [in Iowa] by supporting the holy trinity of ethanol, Jesus and soft money. (Didn't Jesus throw those soft-money changers out of the temple?)

When the Republican candidates were asked to name their favorite political philosophers, Mr. Bush replied: 'Christ, because he changed my heart.' Pressed to elaborate, the Texas governor again showed his inability to go deep.

His mouth curled down into that famous smirky look. 'Well, if they don't know, it's going to be hard to explain,' he said. 'When you turn your heart and your life over to Christ, when you accept Christ as the Savior, it changes your heart. It changes your life. And that's what happened to me.' Translation: You're either in the Christ club or out of it, on the J.C. team or off. This is the same exclusionary attitude, so offensive to those with different beliefs, that he showed in 1993 when he said that you must believe in Jesus Christ to enter heaven. (Mr. Bush has since conceded that only 'God decides who goes to heaven, not George W. Bush.')....

This is the era of niche marketing, and Jesus is a niche. Why not use the son of God to help the son of Bush appeal to voters? W. is checking Jesus' numbers, and Jesus is polling well in Iowa. Christ, the new wedge issue.

When you take something deeply personal and parade it for political gain, you are guilty either of cynicism or exhibitionism." --Maureen Dowd

Candidate Christ "and a large crowd of reverent volunteers, all of them broke, were trudging along behind the candidate on the cold highway outside Red Bud, Ill., far from the Iowa caucuses. "If we ever get there, we could win the thing easy," the campaign manager said. "He has very good name recognition. Way bigger than Lincoln." He waved an arm in exuberance. "They can't even steal an election from him by voting dead names. Our candidate will come right in with his Lazarus move. He'll have a million at any poll by nightfall. They may come in shaking a lot of dust off them, but they'll be voters. Candidate Christ, he said, merely by his presence could demolish these temporal politicians who use his name like it was a commercial product. In particular, candidate Bush. "How can he say he carries me, Jesus Christ, in his heart," candidate Christ asked, "when at the same time he stands by while people are put to death?" He spoke in a soft voice that carried for a million miles. The candidate continued, "How can he love Christ and take part in capital punishment? I say to you there have been 112 people put to death so far, while he maintains that I reside in his heart. Did not a woman beg for her life and he refused her? I say to you there will be chastisement for using the name of Christ in vain. My position is to listen to the groaning of the prisoners, to release those doomed to death." --Jimmy Breslin

"Does Bush think that Jesus smiled down upon him as he allowed these 112 executions to take place? Does Bush believe in the Biblical line "Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord" or does he not? Does Bush accept only part of the message of Jesus while in his own wisdom feels free to ignore the rest? What does he accept and what does he reject? Is Bush a Christian who believes that Jesus preached a philosophy of love and forgiveness? Or does he believe that in spite of what Jesus said and did, the Christian God must be a punishing Old Testament deity, with Bush merely serving as another exterminating angel?...

"Such questions....are not irrelevant when Bush the Candidate makes his religion a major entry in his biography and a reason for some Americans to elect him president.... "On matters of life and death, Cardinal Bernardin of Chicago used to speak about the "seamless web." It was an argument for moral coherence. If you opposed abortion, he said, you must also oppose capital punishment and most wars. Life itself was sacred, said Bernardin; only God could bring it to an end, not someone as flawed as a man. That was a coherent and humane philosophy, whether you were religious or not. Bush, like so many other politicians, wants it both ways: to trumpet his Christian beliefs, while maintaining the freedom to kill human beings."
--Pete Hamill

Bush Plays the Jesus Card. "As H. L. Mencken pointed out, religion 'is used as a club and a cloak by both politicians and moralists, all of them lusting for power and most of them palpable frauds.' George W. Bush finally scored some debate points on Monday night by supporting the holy trinity of ethanol, Jesus and soft money. (Didn't Jesus throw those soft-money changers out of the temple?)
When the Republican candidates were asked to name their favorite political philosophers, Mr. Bush replied: 'Christ, because he changed my heart.' Pressed to elaborate, the Texas governor again showed his inability to go deep. To borrow a Dorothy Parker quip, he ran the gamut from A to B. Just as in the last debate, when he was asked to expound on a biography of Dean Acheson, he gave the impression that he thought coughing up an impressive name was quite enough.

His mouth curled down into that famous smirky look. 'Well, if they don't know, it's going to be hard to explain,' he said. 'When you turn your heart and your life over to Christ, when you accept Christ as the Savior, it changes your heart. It changes your life. And that's what happened to me.' Translation: You're either in the Christ club or out of it, on the J.C. team or off. And who was the "turn into peanut butter!" guy on WCFL? (Pip?)

Two great stations we could hear in Ohio at night from Chicago.

Also CKLW in Windsor and WOWO in Ft. Wayne.

An update from Mr. Miklaszewski himself. As Drudge likes to say, IMPACTING!!!...

From MSNBC today. Jim Miklaszewski reporting:

Following up on that story from last night, military officials tell NBC News that on April 10, 2003, when the Second Brigade of the 101st Airborne entered the Al QaQaa weapons facility south of Baghdad, that those troops were actually on their way to Baghdad, that they were not actively involved in the search for any weapons, including the high explosives, H.M.X. and

R.D.X. The troops did observe stock piles of conventional weapons but no H.M.X. or R.D.X. and because the Al Qaqaa facility is so huge, it's not clear that those troops from the 101st were actually anywhere near the bunkers that reportedly contained the H.M.X. and R.D.X. Three months earlier, during an inspection of the Al Qaqaa compound, the International Atomic Energy Agency secured and sealed 350 metric tons of H.M.X. and R.D.X. Then in March shortly before the war began, the I.A.E.A. conducted another inspection and found that the H.M.X. stockpile was still intact and still under seal. But inspectors were unable to inspect the R.D.X. stockpile and could not verify that the R.D.X. was still at the compound. Pentagon officials say elements of the 101st airborne did conduct a thorough search of several facilities around the Al QaQaa compound for several weeks during the month of April in search of W.M.D. They found no W.M.D. And Pentagon officials say it's not clear at that time whether those other elements of the 101st actually searched the Al QaQaa compound. Now, Pentagon officials say U.S. troops and members of the Iraq Survey Group did arrive at the Al QaQaa compound on May 27. And when they did, they found no H.M.X. or R.D.X. or any other weapons under seal at the time. Now, the Iraqi government is officially said that the high explosives were stolen by looters. Pentagon officials claim it's possible -- they're not sure, they say, but it's possible that Saddam Hussein himself ordered that these high explosives be removed and hidden before the war. What is clear is that the 350 metric tons of high explosives are still missing, and that the U.S. or Iraqi governments or international inspectors for that matter cannot say with any certainty where they are today.

Peel was the best, a real champion of rock and roll. Miss him already. It's sad he died away from home. Peel dearly loved his home in the country, located between Ipswich and Bury-St.-Edmund, he had his studio there and could record his radio program while watching farm animals. I'm sure some sour listeners won't miss him ... Peel told me years ago that his program generated more negative mail than any other on BBC World Service. I used to love the way announcers would come out of "World Business Report" and announce, "And now it's time for John Peel with his sort of music." R.I.P. John.

Dunleavy actually whinged: "In my book, Kerry is giving comfort and succor to the enemy."

Umm, no you fair-dinkum yellow-journalist dipshit. It wasn't Kerry who boasted the challenge "Bring 'Em On!!" If you want to give more than comfort and succor to the enemy, try negligent pre-planning and the failure to secure 380 tons of explosives. That's 380 tons of weaponry that can be used to target your kid and his brother-in-arms. Ever heard the expression "sticks and stones." Well, it's a free country Dunleavy you Nazi wanker, it's a dumbass war and a man has the right to say so. Words won't kill your kid, but dynamite can.

Hmmmmmmmmm, I thought the subject was about that dyke ann coulter and her getting pied?

Then the little weasel brian hill pipes up about a warmonger salute.......learn to read the complete "thread" before speaking up Steve.

Countries are finding that none of their nationals are listening, Germans not listening to DW, Brits not listening to BBCWS etc.
So the most important self-market is lost.
Only countries wise in diplomacy know that a constant SW presence in the vernacular languages (Pashto to Afghanistan, Spanish to the Aamericas, etc.) will be useful in the future influence (rising incomes, desire to buy quality imported goods, friendly to military occupiers, etc. etc.)
Shortwave is a cheap fifth column for multiple externalities.

Then quit acting like it. And for your information dimwit I have worked in countries where wars were or have taken place. My ocupation has taken me all over the globe repairing damaged equipment and piplines. I have many many friends that live in these countries as well. You don't have to be in the military Les.

        I was just in Nigeria where only the 10 or 20 dollars (USD) Chinese radios are used.  There are Sony's sold, but Worldspace radios are very uncommon, and a friend only got one as a prixe in a RFI contest, but otherwise couldn't spend that kind of money for a radio.
        Shortwave there had everything, from the Middle East, Europe and Ascension, much of it for several hours of programming.
        Worldspace is an idea, but in practice little used.
        And my friend fried their radio so that they could only use the earphones as the speaker circuit didn't work for WorldSpace, and they moved every four months for economic reasons and not every place was suitable for setting out the WorldSpace without getting it ripped off.

"ocupation"   "piplines"

Well, It is obvious your occupation isn't connected to correct spelling.

I have always been amazed that those who are most vocal about wars have never served in the military. "Warmonger" my ass! You come from a generation that can't spell, didn't join the military and now you want to crush and kill.

And, yes I served, 1960-1964 U.S. Navy.

I've read reports of the 3030 having intermod problems, but overall it gets good reviews.  How is the synch detector on it?  How does it compare to Drakes?

The "jammer" you can hear in the background of most Radio Marti broadcasts has always sounded like an "aquarium" to me.  It's probably a lot louder in Cuba, where the jamming signal originates (I think). We're a lot closer to the Radio Marti signal, so it's just kind of in the background.  That's one possibility of what it is, anyhow.

Tony

No just want to rid the world of scumbags that do crush and kill. Why don't you get off your dead ass and go to some of these countries and see for yourself how these people are treated and how they have to live. If you did, your tune would change. Your way is to ignore it. Buy the way. Your critique of my spelling is lame at best.

Well, for starters, I lived overseas from 1954 until 1960. I've been in just about any country in the middle east, africa, and europe that were legal to enter between 1957 and 1972.

I'm trying real hard to figure out what that has to do with your dream date ann coulter (transsexual) getting pied?

My ass isn't dead yet sonny, still hitting it five days a week and making damn good money. But, next year will see my fun-o-meter getting pegged.

Keep working so I can retire in the manner in which I am accustomed to living will you?

If you spelled correctly, nobody would critique it now, would they?

Go look at that picture of dan coulter and drool....................

check his/her adams apple dummy!

True.  Dan Rather has it out for Bush.  So what?  What's your problem with it?  He's entitled to his opinion.

The US Security services have a 'Tempest' EMI standard. Actually it is an Acronym for Transient Electromagnetic Pulse Emanation Standard)

Technically it is  National Communications Security Information Memorandum 5100  or NCSIM 5100. The exact specification is classified, but having actually seen some Tempest compliant equipment in the late 1980's, I can tell you  it makes FCC class B look like a cake walk. Several computer makes made Tempest compliant systems, and other Tempest Compliant devices. The idea was that these devices would have no EMI/RFI signature to intercept.. These things would be used inside embassies, Military, FBI and various intelligence installations.

Such systems were tested to comply with the Tempest standard

Not all devices have such a signature in the first place. The US Navy is quite fond of TRF radios. Devices that have no oscillators generally have no significant signatures either. TRF radios lack oscillators, hence have no significant EMI/RFI signature.

Heard an encrypted message on 111.75 @ 21:20 z.  First heard some tones going back and forth.  Never had heard them before.  Then heard some short transmissions and what sounded like a test count (1,2,3,4,5--5,4,3,2,1).

Tried twidling the (electronic) knobs.  No Joy.

Simply put, you can't rely on his descriptions, and from what I've heard, the item in the photo may look much nicer than the one he ships.

I have a feeling it's always been a deep personal sadness for Karl that he never had the chance to work with Hitler.  So much more damage that could have been done.

Back when a GPS receiver wasn't a common item, my non-aircraft-type GPS receiver got the same reception on a flight.  The captain couldn't stop playing with it.  (I think he wanted me to offer to give it to him.)

I'm not interested in sex with you you creep. You are so disgusting and you can't get anything right. You think I eat dirt, you think I'm gay and want to have sex with you, you think top posting is OK. You are wrong about everything.

Now you can apologize.

You are getting the story laughably wrong. Just like Bush and his stooge Matt Drudge. Kerry's outrage is deserved. Those weapons disappeared right under Bush's nose. He is an incompetent boob. His pre-planning for his War of Choice is a sick & perverted joke. It's a sad day when the president of the United States gets his talking points from a retracted NBC story.

(October 26, 2004 -- 10:52 PM EDT)
The lede in tomorrow's Times story about al Qaqaa ...

White House officials reasserted yesterday that 380 tons of powerful explosives may have disappeared from a vast Iraqi military complex while Saddam Hussein controlled Iraq, saying a brigade of American soldiers did not find the explosives when they visited the complex on April 10, 2003, the day after Baghdad fell.

But the unit's commander said in an interview yesterday that his troops had not searched the facility and had merely stopped there for the night on their way to Baghdad.

President Bush's aides told reporters that because the soldiers had found no trace of the missing explosives on April 10, the explosives could have been removed before the American invasion. They based their assertions on a report broadcast by NBC News on Monday night that showed video footage of the 101st arriving at Al Qaqaa.

By yesterday afternoon, as Mr. Bush made his way through Wisconsin and Iowa, his aides had moderated their view, saying it was a "mystery" when the explosives disappeared. They said that it could have happened before or after the invasion and that Mr. Bush did not want to comment on the matter until the facts were known.

Reduced to hanging their hat on the say-so of the NBC News crew. Splendid.

Much more on this evening. But for now, this stuff pretty much says it all, doesn't it?

They are White House pimps, they are given their talking points and given their marching orders, they serve a purpose. They may be idiots, but they are useful. Witness all the ill-informed and delusional Americans who swallow their lies...it's an international disgrace.

There you go again. The CNN story is already old, already wrong. They cite an original NBC post that NBC News went to great lengths tonight to discredit. In fact, they threw extra egg on Bush's face. Examine the facts:

(October 26, 2004 -- 10:52 PM EDT)

The lede in tomorrow's Times story about al Qaqaa ...

White House officials reasserted yesterday that 380 tons of powerful explosives may have disappeared from a vast Iraqi military complex while Saddam Hussein controlled Iraq, saying a brigade of American soldiers did not find the explosives when they visited the complex on April 10, 2003, the day after Baghdad fell.

But the unit's commander said in an interview yesterday that his troops had not searched the facility and had merely stopped there for the night on their way to Baghdad.

And then there's this ...

President Bush's aides told reporters that because the soldiers had found no trace of the missing explosives on April 10, the explosives could have been removed before the American invasion. They based their assertions on a report broadcast by NBC News on Monday night that showed video footage of the 101st arriving at Al Qaqaa.

By yesterday afternoon, as Mr. Bush made his way through Wisconsin and Iowa, his aides had moderated their view, saying it was a "mystery" when the explosives disappeared. They said that it could have happened before or after the invasion and that Mr. Bush did not want to comment on the matter until the facts were known.

Reduced to hanging their hat on the say-so of the NBC News crew. Splendid.

Much more on this evening. But for now, this stuff pretty much says it all, doesn't it?

In all his decriptions he hypes the condition of the product. I bought a "like new" with box radio from him. One potentiometer on the front was bad, and it had some scracthes on top he never mentioned. It also said it "is the latest model number I have ever seen before" when it turned out to be a pretty early model number. I was new to SWL listening and just trusted him and fell for it.

After I received the radio I wrote him, telling him he's a cheat and asked for some money back. He quickly refunded some money to my Paypal account. I was scared to send it back really in fear of ending up with nothing.

Now on the fair side. Does the radio work?Yes it does. But that's not the point. He's a bullcrap artist that can't be totally trusted. It's up to you. Ask the right questions of him and save the e-mails. Pay with a credit card just in case.

Bush insisted the invasion of Iraq was about weapons and terrorists.

So when flyboy invaded Iraq, he ignored the weapons, and let them slip into the hands of the terrorists.

Bush insisted the invasion of Iraq had nothing to do with oil.

So when flyboy invaded Iraq, the one single ministry and industrial infrastructure flyboy secured was, you guessed it, the oil ministry and the oil fields.

Good to get your lies and priorities in order Mr. Bush.

No wonder the world doesn't trust you. You are a bald-faced liar making plays outta the Josef Goebbels hand-book.

You would truly have to be an ignorant gullible idiot to believe this filthy liar and vote for him.

Why would you expect him, or any of the networks to change their tune now? They were all on board whipped up with war hysteria and spreading White House lies like manure over the American heartland. None asked serious questions. They were all White House stenographers before the war.

Portrait of a country on the verge of a nervous breakdown

With only nine days to go and the polls showing Bush and Kerry still neck and neck, the result is once agin likely to turn on the minutiae of the voting system. But this time the whole country seems poised to descend into post-election chaos. Andrew Gumbel reports on the traumatising effects of this bitter campaign and how, as the world's most powerful democracy talks of exporting freedom to Iraq, it is at risk of becoming an object of international ridicule
24 October 2004
The Independent UK
No need to wonder if this year's US presidential election is headed for another meltdown: the meltdown has already started. The voting machines have already begun to break down, accusations of systematic voter suppression and fraud are rampant, and lawyers fully armed and ready with an intimate knowledge of the nation's byzantine election laws have flocked to court to cry foul in half a dozen states.

Nine days out from election day, we don't yet know whether the state-by-state arithmetic will lead to a post-election stalemate similar to the 36-day battle for Florida in 2000. It is, of course, possible that the margins of victory in the 50 states will be wide enough to avert the worst - even if overall conditions are likely to fall short of the usual definition of a free and fair election.

Given the nail-bitingly close numbers in the opinion polls, however, Election 2004 could just as easily produce a concatenation of knockdown, drag-out fights in several states at once, making the d�b�cle in Florida four years ago look, in retrospect, like the constitutional equivalent of a vicarage tea party.

Last week saw the start of early voting in Florida and a clutch of other states, and with it came a plethora of problems. In three heavily populated counties - around Tampa, Orlando and Fort Lauderdale - the network connection used to verify voter identifications broke down on the first day, creating hours of delay. In Jacksonville, where poor ballot design in 2000 knocked out the votes of 27,000 poor, predominantly black, predominantly Democratic voters, the county elections supervisor chose the first day of polling to resign, citing ill health. He had come under fire for failing to make early voting available in the city's African-American neighbourhoods - something his interim successor is now going some way to remedy.

Elsewhere, there were computer breakdowns during early voting in Memphis. Pre-election testing of electronic machines in Riverside County, California, and in Palm Beach County, Florida, led to multiple computer crashes. Elsewhere, machines have manifested problems handling basic addition - especially when asked to display instructions in a language other than English. Several county administrators have chosen simply to skip the non-English language part of the test.

In Nebraska, dead people were found to have applied for absentee ballots. In Ohio, a representative of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People was found to have offered crack cocaine to a known drug addict in exchange for completed voter registration forms, which he duly submitted in the names of Mary Poppins, Janet Jackson and Jeffrey Dahmer, the notorious cannibal serial killer.

This is just the beginning. The Kerry campaign alone has signed up 10,000 lawyers around the country to oversee registration and absentee ballot procedures, keep tabs on computer voting companies, collect stories of alleged disenfranchisement or irregularities at the polls, and watch state elections officials with hawk-eyed attention for every ruling that might be construed as having a partisan, rather than a public interest intent.

"The lawyering won't start the day after the election," said Kendall Coffey, a Democratic Party lawyer in Miami who was deeply involved in the 2000 fiasco. "It's already under way." Florida Congressman Robert Wexler, who is deep in litigation with his state government over the failure of Florida's electronic voting machines to produce an independent paper trail, concurred. "The dangers are limitless," he said. "They are limited only by the inventiveness of those who would tamper with the system and create havoc."

It beggars belief that the world's most powerful democracy should find itself in this hole for the second time in a row - becoming an object of international ridicule, scorn and not a little alarm, even as the country's leaders talk idealistically about exporting American freedom and democracy to Afghanistan, Iraq and beyond.

After the last fiasco everyone from President Bush down vowed to fix the system and ensure another Florida could never happen. But three big things went wrong. First, the new generation of computer touchscreen machines - brought in at dizzying speed and at even more dizzying cost to replace the discredited old punch-cards - turned out to be poorly programmed, unverifiable, prone to all manner of failure and susceptible to undetectable foul play.

Secondly, the Bush administration dragged its feet about enacting funding its own new election laws. As a result, most states won't have their electoral procedures fully updated and coordinated until the next presidential election in 2008. That, in turn, is opening up furious arguments about the ill-defined rules for provisional ballots, absentee ballots, ID card requirements at polling stations and other seemingly esoteric bureaucratic niceties that could have a huge impact on turnout - especially among the poorer, less educated classes who have traditionally been ignored, if not excluded, by the two major parties.

Thirdly, the political leadership allowed itself to be deluded into thinking that the dysfunctions of the US electoral system were purely a matter of technology. Fix the machines, the thinking went, and everything else will be fine. What should have been glaringly obvious in 2000, and is even more glaringly obvious now, is that the failures of the electoral process were a direct result of the ferocity of broader political battles. The blithe incompetence of local election officials and their wonky machinery were side-effects of these battles, not the cause.

In 2000, much of the agony of Florida could in fact have been avoided if the parties had agreed to a state-wide manual recount - as happened in an equally close, but amicably resolved, Senate race in Washington state that year. It was the high stakes of the White House, not the messy accumulation of hanging, dimpled and pregnant chads, that sparked the crisis. And we know the stakes are infinitely higher this time, in what has been called the most important US election in memory.

There has been nothing to match the current passions in American politics since the Civil Rights era and the Vietnam War. Campaigns have never been dirtier, or more intensely fought or more expensive. Both major parties have vowed to do whatever it takes to win, and each has accused the other of engaging in out-and-out cheating.

The whole country - never mind the woefully inadequate electoral system - is now living on the edge of a nervous breakdown. Little wonder, then, if many are predicting some sort of collapse on 2 November. "Only a miracle, it strikes me, can prevent this election from descending into post-election chaos," John Dean, the Watergate-era White House counsel who knows a thing or two about electoral dirty tricks, wrote last week.

What has been striking is the sheer nastiness of the fight. In Oregon, Pennsylvania and Nevada - all swing states - a Republican political consulting group called Sproul & Associates has been accused of passing itself off as a non-partisan or even a Democratic civic organisation to collect voter registration applications outside libraries and supermarkets. In at least two instances now under criminal investigation, company employees have been accused of processing the applications of declared Republican voters while throwing the forms marked Democrat into the nearest rubbish bin. Sproul, which has received more than $600,000 (�330,000) from the Republican National Committee, has denied ever endorsing such practices. Still, the discarded voter registration forms have been paraded on television for all to see.

In Ohio and Florida, it is the Republican secretaries of state - who oversee elections - who have been accused of putting partisan preference above their solemn civic duties. Ohio's Ken Blackwell won points from voting rights activists earlier in the year when he chose not to go ahead with a massive state-wide buy of electronic voting machines. Since then, however, he has tried to insist that all voter registration forms be submitted on 80lb stock paper - a ruling struck down by the courts after he was accused of blatantly attempting to suppress the votes of likely Democrats.

He has also tried to make life harder for provisional voters, saying their ballots will be recognised only if they show up at exactly the right precinct. This too was struck down in court because it was deemed likely to suppress votes - especially among transient students and low-income workers. But Secretary Blackwell has continued to implement the policy in defiance of the court order, prompting a harsh rebuke from the judge.

In Florida, Secretary of State Glenda Hood has been repeatedly accused of doing the political bidding of the man who appointed her - Governor Jeb Bush, the President's brother. Her more recent exploits include directing county supervisors to throw out registration forms where applicants have signed a statement declaring they are US citizens but have forgotten to check a citizenry box elsewhere on the form. This, too, is seen as a vote-suppressing mechanism. It, too, is now in the courts.

Secretary Hood has also been waging a months-long campaign to ban what limited manual recounts the electronic voting machines permit. Her initial ruling was struck down by the courts, but now she has come up with a staggeringly devious rewrite. The state will now permit analysis of the computerised machines' internal audit logs in the event of a close race, she said, but if there is any discrepancy the county supervisors are to go with the original count. In other words: we will do recounts, but if the recounts change the outcome we will disregard them.

Secretary Hood's actions illuminate the real attraction of the electronic voting machines in the states where they have been introduced. They may work no better than the old punch-card machines - studies suggest they fail to record as many votes as their predecessors. In the absence of an independent paper trail, how- ever, all evidence of problems is hidden away in the binary code of an electronic black box and is, to all intents and purposes, invisible.

This raises intriguing and troubling questions about what a post-election contest might look like. One can reasonably anticipate - based on past experience - an avalanche of stories about voters turned away from polling stations, told they are on a felons list even if they have no criminal record, or kept waiting for hours because of technical glitches. No doubt people will tell some of those thousands of lawyers how they pressed the screen for one candidate, only to have the other's name light up.

The problem is, even if lawyers for the losing candidate are able to prove that the system failed, they will find it very difficult to talk specific numbers and demonstrate that enough votes were lost to alter the outcome.

How the courts will react to this hypothetical state of affairs is anybody's guess. They could accept the given election results, however flawed. They could allow the arguments to rage until December, when the electoral college is supposed to meet, or even into the new year, when an undecided election would be thrown into the House of Representatives.

Or they could be trumped, once again, by the Supreme Court. The most disconcerting possibility is that the highest court in the land could remove the electoral process from the voters altogether and turn it over to the state legislatures. Technically, they can do this under Article II of the Constitution, which offers no automatic right to vote. We know from the deliberations in 2000 that two, possibly five, of the nine justices have doubts whether the people should be the ultimate arbiters of presidential elections - a strict, literal reading of the Constitution that no modern Supreme Court countenanced before the current crop of ultra-conservatives. "After granting the franchise in the special context of Article II," the majority declared in its Bush vs Gore ruling, "[the state] can take back the power to appoint electors."

Were this scenario to play out it would leave the fate of many of the electoral battlegrounds in the hands of Republican-controlled state legislatures (in Florida and Ohio, for starters), who would promptly hand the election to George Bush. Talk about a nightmare scenario - which is why every elections official and every "small d" democrat in the land is praying it won't get that close.

Portrait of a country on the verge of a nervous breakdown

With only nine days to go and the polls showing Bush and Kerry still neck and neck, the result is once agin likely to turn on the minutiae of the voting system. But this time the whole country seems poised to descend into post-election chaos. Andrew Gumbel reports on the traumatising effects of this bitter campaign and how, as the world's most powerful democracy talks of exporting freedom to Iraq, it is at risk of becoming an object of international ridicule

24 October 2004
The Independent UK

No need to wonder if this year's US presidential election is headed for another meltdown: the meltdown has already started. The voting machines have already begun to break down, accusations of systematic voter suppression and fraud are rampant, and lawyers fully armed and ready with an intimate knowledge of the nation's byzantine election laws have flocked to court to cry foul in half a dozen states.

Nine days out from election day, we don't yet know whether the state-by-state arithmetic will lead to a post-election stalemate similar to the 36-day battle for Florida in 2000. It is, of course, possible that the margins of victory in the 50 states will be wide enough to avert the worst - even if overall conditions are likely to fall short of the usual definition of a free and fair election.

Given the nail-bitingly close numbers in the opinion polls, however, Election 2004 could just as easily produce a concatenation of knockdown, drag-out fights in several states at once, making the d�b�cle in Florida four years ago look, in retrospect, like the constitutional equivalent of a vicarage tea party.

Last week saw the start of early voting in Florida and a clutch of other states, and with it came a plethora of problems. In three heavily populated counties - around Tampa, Orlando and Fort Lauderdale - the network connection used to verify voter identifications broke down on the first day, creating hours of delay. In Jacksonville, where poor ballot design in 2000 knocked out the votes of 27,000 poor, predominantly black, predominantly Democratic voters, the county elections supervisor chose the first day of polling to resign, citing ill health. He had come under fire for failing to make early voting available in the city's African-American neighbourhoods - something his interim successor is now going some way to remedy.

Elsewhere, there were computer breakdowns during early voting in Memphis. Pre-election testing of electronic machines in Riverside County, California, and in Palm Beach County, Florida, led to multiple computer crashes. Elsewhere, machines have manifested problems handling basic addition - especially when asked to display instructions in a language other than English. Several county administrators have chosen simply to skip the non-English language part of the test.

In Nebraska, dead people were found to have applied for absentee ballots. In Ohio, a representative of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People was found to have offered crack cocaine to a known drug addict in exchange for completed voter registration forms, which he duly submitted in the names of Mary Poppins, Janet Jackson and Jeffrey Dahmer, the notorious cannibal serial killer.

This is just the beginning. The Kerry campaign alone has signed up 10,000 lawyers around the country to oversee registration and absentee ballot procedures, keep tabs on computer voting companies, collect stories of alleged disenfranchisement or irregularities at the polls, and watch state elections officials with hawk-eyed attention for every ruling that might be construed as having a partisan, rather than a public interest intent.

"The lawyering won't start the day after the election," said Kendall Coffey, a Democratic Party lawyer in Miami who was deeply involved in the 2000 fiasco. "It's already under way." Florida Congressman Robert Wexler, who is deep in litigation with his state government over the failure of Florida's electronic voting machines to produce an independent paper trail, concurred. "The dangers are limitless," he said. "They are limited only by the inventiveness of those who would tamper with the system and create havoc."

It beggars belief that the world's most powerful democracy should find itself in this hole for the second time in a row - becoming an object of international ridicule, scorn and not a little alarm, even as the country's leaders talk idealistically about exporting American freedom and democracy to Afghanistan, Iraq and beyond.

After the last fiasco everyone from President Bush down vowed to fix the system and ensure another Florida could never happen. But three big things went wrong. First, the new generation of computer touchscreen machines - brought in at dizzying speed and at even more dizzying cost to replace the discredited old punch-cards - turned out to be poorly programmed, unverifiable, prone to all manner of failure and susceptible to undetectable foul play.

Secondly, the Bush administration dragged its feet about enacting funding its own new election laws. As a result, most states won't have their electoral procedures fully updated and coordinated until the next presidential election in 2008. That, in turn, is opening up furious arguments about the ill-defined rules for provisional ballots, absentee ballots, ID card requirements at polling stations and other seemingly esoteric bureaucratic niceties that could have a huge impact on turnout - especially among the poorer, less educated classes who have traditionally been ignored, if not excluded, by the two major parties.

Thirdly, the political leadership allowed itself to be deluded into thinking that the dysfunctions of the US electoral system were purely a matter of technology. Fix the machines, the thinking went, and everything else will be fine. What should have been glaringly obvious in 2000, and is even more glaringly obvious now, is that the failures of the electoral process were a direct result of the ferocity of broader political battles. The blithe incompetence of local election officials and their wonky machinery were side-effects of these battles, not the cause.

In 2000, much of the agony of Florida could in fact have been avoided if the parties had agreed to a state-wide manual recount - as happened in an equally close, but amicably resolved, Senate race in Washington state that year. It was the high stakes of the White House, not the messy accumulation of hanging, dimpled and pregnant chads, that sparked the crisis. And we know the stakes are infinitely higher this time, in what has been called the most important US election in memory.

There has been nothing to match the current passions in American politics since the Civil Rights era and the Vietnam War. Campaigns have never been dirtier, or more intensely fought or more expensive. Both major parties have vowed to do whatever it takes to win, and each has accused the other of engaging in out-and-out cheating.

The whole country - never mind the woefully inadequate electoral system - is now living on the edge of a nervous breakdown. Little wonder, then, if many are predicting some sort of collapse on 2 November. "Only a miracle, it strikes me, can prevent this election from descending into post-election chaos," John Dean, the Watergate-era White House counsel who knows a thing or two about electoral dirty tricks, wrote last week.

What has been striking is the sheer nastiness of the fight. In Oregon, Pennsylvania and Nevada - all swing states - a Republican political consulting group called Sproul & Associates has been accused of passing itself off as a non-partisan or even a Democratic civic organisation to collect voter registration applications outside libraries and supermarkets. In at least two instances now under criminal investigation, company employees have been accused of processing the applications of declared Republican voters while throwing the forms marked Democrat into the nearest rubbish bin. Sproul, which has received more than $600,000 (�330,000) from the Republican National Committee, has denied ever endorsing such practices. Still, the discarded voter registration forms have been paraded on television for all to see.

In Ohio and Florida, it is the Republican secretaries of state - who oversee elections - who have been accused of putting partisan preference above their solemn civic duties. Ohio's Ken Blackwell won points from voting rights activists earlier in the year when he chose not to go ahead with a massive state-wide buy of electronic voting machines. Since then, however, he has tried to insist that all voter registration forms be submitted on 80lb stock paper - a ruling struck down by the courts after he was accused of blatantly attempting to suppress the votes of likely Democrats.

He has also tried to make life harder for provisional voters, saying their ballots will be recognised only if they show up at exactly the right precinct. This too was struck down in court because it was deemed likely to suppress votes - especially among transient students and low-income workers. But Secretary Blackwell has continued to implement the policy in defiance of the court order, prompting a harsh rebuke from the judge.

In Florida, Secretary of State Glenda Hood has been repeatedly accused of doing the political bidding of the man who appointed her - Governor Jeb Bush, the President's brother. Her more recent exploits include directing county supervisors to throw out registration forms where applicants have signed a statement declaring they are US citizens but have forgotten to check a citizenry box elsewhere on the form. This, too, is seen as a vote-suppressing mechanism. It, too, is now in the courts.

Secretary Hood has also been waging a months-long campaign to ban what limited manual recounts the electronic voting machines permit. Her initial ruling was struck down by the courts, but now she has come up with a staggeringly devious rewrite. The state will now permit analysis of the computerised machines' internal audit logs in the event of a close race, she said, but if there is any discrepancy the county supervisors are to go with the original count. In other words: we will do recounts, but if the recounts change the outcome we will disregard them.

Secretary Hood's actions illuminate the real attraction of the electronic voting machines in the states where they have been introduced. They may work no better than the old punch-card machines - studies suggest they fail to record as many votes as their predecessors. In the absence of an independent paper trail, how- ever, all evidence of problems is hidden away in the binary code of an electronic black box and is, to all intents and purposes, invisible.

This raises intriguing and troubling questions about what a post-election contest might look like. One can reasonably anticipate - based on past experience - an avalanche of stories about voters turned away from polling stations, told they are on a felons list even if they have no criminal record, or kept waiting for hours because of technical glitches. # Hannity, Blitzer, and The Note mischaracterized NBC report on NYT missing-explosives article

Following The New York Times's disclosure on October 25 that "nearly 380 tons of powerful conventional explosives -- used to demolish buildings, make missile warheads and detonate nuclear weapons -- are missing from one of Iraq's most sensitive former military installations," members of the media incorrectly reported that a subsequent NBC Nightly News story refuted aspects of the New York Times article.

FOX News Channel co-host Sean Hannity, CNN host Wolf Blitzer, and ABC News's online political briefing "The Note" all suggested that NBC reported that the explosives were already gone by the time the U.S. military first arrived on April 10, 2003, at the installation in question. But at no point did the October 25 NBC report claim that the April 10 stopover of U.S. troops, which included an embedded NBC reporter, was the first time the U.S. military visited the Al Qa Qaa installation. Indeed, the Associated Press reported that U.S. soldiers had been there six days earlier, and did find evidence of explosives. Moreover, the same NBC correspondent who issued the October 25 report clarified on October 26 that troops were simply passing through the installation on April 10 and were not looking for explosives.

According to a report on the October 25 edition of NBC's Nightly News, an NBC reporter embedded with the 101st Airborne Division arrived at the Al Qa Qaa military installation on April 10, one day after the fall of Baghdad. From the report by NBC Pentagon correspondent Jim Miklaszewski:

> MIKLASZEWSKI: April 10, 2003, only three weeks into the war, NBC News was embedded with troops from the Army's 101st Airborne as they temporarily take over the Al Qa Qaa weapons installation south of Baghdad. But these troops never found the nearly 380 tons of some of the most powerful conventional explosives called HMX and RDX, which is now missing. The U.S. troops did find large stockpiles of more conventional weapons, but no HMX or RDX, so powerful, less than a pound brought down Pan Am [Flight] 103 in 1988 [over Lockerbie, Scotland] and can be used to trigger a nuclear weapon.
> In a letter this month, the Iraqi interim government told the International Atomic Energy Agency [IAEA] the high explosives were lost to theft and looting due to lack of security. Critics claim there were simply not enough U.S. troops to guard hundreds of weapons stockpiles, weapons now being used by insurgents and terrorists to wage a guerrilla war in Iraq.

Based on that NBC report, Hannity and Blitzer incorrectly suggested and The Note simply -- and falsely -- asserted that NBC reported that the weapons were gone by the time the troops first arrived at the Al Qa Qaa site. But at no point did the NBC report claim that the arrival of its embedded crew at Al Qa Qaa on April 10 was the first time U.S. troops visited the site. In fact, as the Associated Press reported (on April 5, 2003), the U.S. military arrived at the site six days earlier, on April 4, when the 3rd Infantry Division found, among other things, "white powder that appeared to be used for explosives."

Here's what Hannity said on the October 25 edition of FOX News Channel's Hannity & Colmes:

> HANNITY: NBC News just late tonight broke this story. They were with the 101st when they arrived at that facility with the weapons. And what they discovered, there were no weapons when the military arrived.

CNN's Wolf Blitzer repeated the error on the October 26 edition of News from CNN:

> BLITZER: It's unclear, though, when those explosives went missing. The IAEA apparently says that earlier, just before the war, they did verify they were still at that location -- the Al Qa Qaa location, but when troops got there by April 10, April 11, after [former Iraqi leader] Saddam Hussein fell, apparently they were no longer there, those tons of explosives.

The October 26 edition of ABC News political unit's "The Note" repeated the error as well:

> An NBC News report last night suggested that those explosives went missing before April 10, 2003 -- before U.S. troops ever got to the site in Iraq, leading to an avalanche of push-back from the Bush campaign last night. If the 101st Airborne Division was indeed there one day after liberation and they could not find any of the high grade explosives, that does cast doubt on the suggestion that the Bush Administration's alleged failure to plan for post-war eventualities was to blame.

NBC's Miklaszewski clarified on October 26 that there was another reason why the troops arriving April 10 didn't find explosives -- they weren't looking for them. Following up on his report on NBC's Nightly News, Miklaszewski offered this additional clarification on MSNBC on October 26:

> Following up on that story from last night, military officials tell NBC News that on April 10, 2003, when the Second Brigade of the 101st Airborne entered the Al Qa Qaa weapons facility south of Baghdad, that those troops were actually on their way to Baghdad, that they were not actively involved in the search for any weapons, including the high explosives HMX and RDX. The troops did observe stockpiles of conventional weapons but no HMX or RDX, and because the Al Qa Qaa facility is so huge, it's not clear that those troops from the 101st were actually anywhere near the bunkers that reportedly contained the HMX and RDX.

> another meltdown: the meltdown has already started. The voting machines have already begun to break down, accusations of systematic voter suppression and fraud are rampant, and lawyers fully armed and ready with an intimate knowledge of the nation's byzantine election laws have flocked to court to cry foul in half a dozen states.
> Nine days out from election day, we don't yet know whether the state-by-state arithmetic will lead to a post-election stalemate similar to the 36-day battle for Florida in 2000. It is, of course, possible that the margins of victory in the 50 states will be wide enough to avert the worst - even if overall conditions are likely to fall short of the usual definition of a free and fair election.
>
> Given the nail-bitingly close numbers in the opinion polls, however, Election 2004 could just as easily produce a concatenation of knockdown, drag-out fights in several states at once, making the d�b�cle in Florida four years ago look, in retrospect, like the constitutional equivalent of a vicarage tea party.
>
> Last week saw the start of early voting in Florida and a clutch of other states, and with it came a plethora of problems. In three heavily populated counties - around Tampa, Orlando and Fort Lauderdale - the network connection used to verify voter identifications broke down on the first day, creating hours of delay. In Jacksonville, where poor ballot design in 2000 knocked out the votes of 27,000 poor, predominantly black, predominantly Democratic voters, the county elections supervisor chose the first day of polling to resign, citing ill health. He had come under fire for failing to make early voting available in the city's African-American neighbourhoods - something his interim successor is now going some way to remedy.
> Elsewhere, there were computer breakdowns during early voting in Memphis. Pre-election testing of electronic machines in Riverside County, California, and in Palm Beach County, Florida, led to multiple computer crashes. Elsewhere, machines have manifested problems handling basic addition - especially when asked to display instructions in a language other than English. Several county administrators have chosen simply to skip the non-English language part of the test.
> In Nebraska, dead people were found to have applied for absentee ballots. In Ohio, a representative of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People was found to have offered crack cocaine to a known drug > addict in exchange for completed voter registration forms, which he duly submitted in the names of Mary Poppins, Janet Jackson and Jeffrey Dahmer, the notorious cannibal serial killer.

> This is just the beginning. The Kerry campaign alone has signed up 10,000 lawyers around the country to oversee registration and absentee ballot procedures, keep tabs on computer voting companies, collect stories of alleged disenfranchisement or irregularities at the polls, and watch state elections officials with hawk-eyed attention for every ruling that might be construed as having a partisan, rather than a public interest intent.
> "The lawyering won't start the day after the election," said Kendall Coffey, a Democratic Party lawyer in Miami who was deeply involved in the 2000 fiasco. "It's already under way." Florida Congressman Robert Wexler, who is deep in litigation with his state government over the failure of Florida's electronic voting machines to produce an independent paper trail, concurred.
> "The dangers are limitless," he said. "They are limited only by the inventiveness of those who would tamper with the system and create havoc."
> It beggars belief that the world's most powerful democracy should find itself in this hole for the second time in a row - becoming an object of international ridicule, scorn and not a little alarm, even as the country's leaders talk idealistically about exporting American freedom and democracy to Afghanistan, Iraq and beyond.
>
> After the last fiasco everyone from President Bush down vowed to fix the system and ensure another Florida could never happen. But three big things went wrong. First, the new generation of computer touchscreen machines - brought in at dizzying speed and at even more dizzying cost to replace the discredited old punch-cards - turned out to be poorly programmed, unverifiable, prone to all manner of failure and susceptible to undetectable foul play.
> Secondly, the Bush administration dragged its feet about enacting funding its own new election laws. As a result, most states won't have their electoral procedures fully updated and coordinated until the next presidential election in 2008. That, in turn, is opening up furious arguments about the ill-defined rules for provisional ballots, absentee ballots, ID card requirements at polling stations and other seemingly esoteric bureaucratic niceties that could have a huge impact on turnout - especially among the poorer, less educated classes who have traditionally been ignored, if not excluded, by the two major parties.
> Thirdly, the political leadership allowed itself to be deluded into thinking that the dysfunctions of the US electoral system were purely a matter of technology. Fix the machines, the thinking went, and everything else will > be fine. What should have been glaringly obvious in 2000, and is even more glaringly obvious now, is that the failures of the electoral process were a direct result of the ferocity of broader political battles. The blithe incompetence of local election officials and their wonky machinery were side-effects of these battles, not the cause.

> In 2000, much of the agony of Florida could in fact have been avoided if the parties had agreed to a state-wide manual recount - as happened in an equally close, but amicably resolved, Senate race in Washington state that year. It was the high stakes of the White House, not the messy accumulation of hanging, dimpled and pregnant chads, that sparked the crisis. And we know the stakes are infinitely higher this time, in what has been called the most important US election in memory.
>
> There has been nothing to match the current passions in American politics since the Civil Rights era and the Vietnam War. Campaigns have never been dirtier, or more intensely fought or more expensive. Both major parties have vowed to do whatever it takes to win, and each has accused the other of engaging in out-and-out cheating.
> The whole country - never mind the woefully inadequate electoral system - is now living on the edge of a nervous breakdown. Little wonder, then, if many are predicting some sort of collapse on 2 November. "Only a miracle, it strikes me, can prevent this election from descending into post-election chaos," John Dean, the Watergate-era White House counsel who knows a thing or two about electoral dirty tricks, wrote last week.
> What has been striking is the sheer nastiness of the fight. In Oregon, Pennsylvania and Nevada - all swing states - a Republican political consulting group called Sproul & Associates has been accused of passing itself off as a non-partisan or even a Democratic civic organisation to collect voter registration applications outside libraries and supermarkets.
> In at least two instances now under criminal investigation, company employees have been accused of processing the applications of declared Republican voters while throwing the forms marked Democrat into the nearest rubbish bin. Sproul, which has received more than $600,000 (�330,000) from the Republican National Committee, has denied ever endorsing such practices.
> Still, the discarded voter registration forms have been paraded on television for all to see.
> In Ohio and Florida, it is the Republican secretaries of state - who > oversee elections - who have been accused of putting partisan preference above their solemn civic duties. Ohio's Ken Blackwell won points from voting rights activists earlier in the year when he chose not to go ahead with a massive state-wide buy of electronic voting machines. Since then, however, he has tried to insist that all voter registration forms be submitted on 80lb stock paper - a ruling struck down by the courts after he was accused of blatantly attempting to suppress the votes of likely Democrats.

> He has also tried to make life harder for provisional voters, saying their ballots will be recognised only if they show up at exactly the right precinct. This too was struck down in court because it was deemed likely to suppress votes - especially among transient students and low-income workers.
> But Secretary Blackwell has continued to implement the policy in defiance of the court order, prompting a harsh rebuke from the judge.
> In Florida, Secretary of State Glenda Hood has been repeatedly accused of doing the political bidding of the man who appointed her - Governor Jeb Bush, the President's brother. Her more recent exploits include directing county supervisors to throw out registration forms where applicants have signed a statement declaring they are US citizens but have forgotten to check a citizenry box elsewhere on the form. This, too, is seen as a vote-suppressing mechanism. It, too, is now in the courts.
> Secretary Hood has also been waging a months-long campaign to ban what limited manual recounts the electronic voting machines permit. Her initial ruling was struck down by the courts, but now she has come up with a staggeringly devious rewrite. The state will now permit analysis of the computerised machines' internal audit logs in the event of a close race, she said, but if there is any discrepancy the county supervisors are to go with the original count. In other words: we will do recounts, but if the recounts change the outcome we will disregard them.
> Secretary Hood's actions illuminate the real attraction of the electronic voting machines in the states where they have been introduced. They may work no better than the old punch-card machines - studies suggest they fail to record as many votes as their predecessors. In the absence of an independent paper trail, how- ever, all evidence of problems is hidden away in the binary code of an electronic black box and is, to all intents and purposes, invisible.

> This raises intriguing and troubling questions about what a post-election

> The problem is, even if lawyers for the losing candidate are able to prove
